Fred Khumalo was born in Chesterville in 1966 and grew up in Mpumalanga Township near Hammarsdale, Durban. A journalism graduate of the former Technikon Natal, he is now the Insight & Opinion Editor of the Sunday Times for which he writes an award-winning weekly column.

He comments: “I only decided to be a writer when I was in high school and started reading magazines such as Tribute, Drum and Pace. I became a writer because there are so many stories to tell.”

Published works and awards include:

- Bitches' Brew - winner of the 2005 European Union Literary Award
- Touch my Blood – an autobiography
- The Early Years – short listed for the 2007 Alan Paton Prize for Non-fiction
- Seven Steps to Heaven
- In 1991 he was a runner-up for the Nadine Gordimer Short Story Award
- Numerous short stories in magazines and literary journals, including Staffrider, Tribute, Drum and Pace
