Supplementary Methods

Serotyping and antimicrobial susceptibility testing of strains. S. Typhi strains were identified using biochemical and slide agglutination using Salmonella Polyvalent O, Polyvalent H, O9 and dH antisera (MAST® ASSURE, Mast Group Ltd, UK) according to manufacturer's instructions. Susceptibility of 29 S. Typhi (2018) was determined previously (1) using disc diffusion tests with concentrations of antibiotics as follows: ampicillin (10 µg), chloramphenicol (30 µg), trimethoprim/sulfamethoxazole (1.25/23.75 µg), ceftriaxone (30 µg), azithromycin (15 µg), ciprofloxacin (5 µg) and tetracycline (30 µg) (Mast, Hampshire, UK). Zone diameters were measured and interpreted using CLSI guidelines (2). Sequence accession number and associated metadata for each isolate is provided in Supplementary Table 1.

Computational analysis of sequence data. Read quality was assessed with fastp (3) and summarized with multiqc (4). Bracken (5) was used to assess the level of contamination. Sequences with a theoretical read depth below 20x, or with less than 80% of Salmonella reads were excluded from further analysis.

The prediction of genotypes was carried out using the updated GenoTyphi scheme (6, 7). Maximum-likelihood phylogenetic trees were constructed from the core single-nucleotide polymorphism (SNP) alignment with reference to S. Typhi strain CT18 (8) using snippy version 4.3.6 as previously described (9). The root node of trees was identified by including outgroups that were removed from final version of the tree (Supplementary table 2). RAxML (version 8.2.10) (10) was used to construct maximum likelihood phylogenetic trees from the core alignment, with the generalized time-reversible model and a Gamma distribution (GTR+Γ substitution GTRGAMMA in RAxML) to model site-specific rate variation. Support for the maximum-likelihood phylogeny was assessed with rapid bootstraps based on the MRE_IGN Bootstrapping criterion. For time-scaled phylogenetic trees, the 4.3.1.1EA1 subtree was extracted using the tree_subset function from treeio (11) and dating of nodes was performed using bactDating (12) using the root from the subtree. Strict gamma, relaxed gamma, mixed gamma, arc, carc and mixedcarc clock models were tested and compared using the BactDating modelcompare function. The arc model was used for the analysis as it showed the lowest deviance information criterion (DIC) (12).

Antimicrobial resistance genes and plasmid replicons were identified using ARIBA version 2.14.6 (13) with the Plasmidfinder (version 1.2) (14) and ResFinder (version 3.1) (15) databases. Mutations in the gyrA, gyrB and parC chromosomal genes were detected using resistance gene identifier (RGI; version 5.1.1) (13). Genome assembly was carried out using SPAdes version 3.13.0 (16) with default parameters. The quality of the assembly was assessed with the quality assessment tool for genome assemblies QUAST version 5.0.2 (17). Assemblies larger than 5.5 MB were excluded from further analysis. Gene models and annotation was carried out using Prokka version 1.14.5 and Bandage (18, 19). For determination of pan-genome and accessory genome, assembled and annotated genome sequences were used as input for Roary version 3.11.2 (20) to identify gene families and their distribution within S. Typhi isolates from Zimbabwe. The gene presence absence matrix was filtered to focus on genes present in at least 3 isolates (~3%) and at most 90 isolates (~95%). Regions of interest were extracted from the relevant genomes for further analysis. Prophage annotation was done using a combination of Prokka to generate the gene model and by manual curation using the output from BLASTp derived annotation of the ORF against nr database (21). Nucleotide sequence BLAST results of prophage ZIM331 against the P88 reference (NC_026014) was visualized using genoPlotR (22).

Supplementary Figures

Supplementary Figure 1. Visualisation of a representative nucleotide sequence assembly graph is consistent with insertion of AMR genes in the chromosome. Contiguously assembled sequence (contigs, grey bars), connections between contigs in the graph (grey lines) and position of genes and insertion sequence (coloured bars on contigs) represent the possible assembly of short read sequence. The assembly graphs are consistent with the insertion of AMR genes aph-6, bla_{TEM-1B}, dfrA7.1, catA1, sul1 and sul2 and mercury resistance genes on the chromosome between the cyaA and cyaY genes.

Supplementary Figure 2. Accessory genome of 95 S. Typhi isolates from typhoid fever cases linked to Zimbabwe. Gene families (columns) present in each genome (blue) are arranged by frequency at which they occur in 95 genomes of S. Typhi strains isolated in Zimbabwe (n=85) or in the UK and associated with travel to Zimbabwe (n=10). Only genes present in greater than two isolates (~3%) and less than 91 isolates (~95%) are shown. Genes with a similar frequency and phylogenetic distribution were classified as group 1, 2 and 3 that correlate with genes present on a composite transposon, IncN plasmid and prophage element, respectively.

Supplementary Figure 3. Comparison of prophage Zim331 with prophage P88. A gene model predicted using prokka show genes with predicted phage functions (blue bars), potential cargo genes (green bars) and hypothetical proteins with no known function (grey bars) based on sequence alignment in the NCBI database, are indicated for prophage P88 and prophage Zim331. Predicted function for proteins encoded by genes are indicated and regions exhibiting >90% sequence identity in direct alignment (red) or reverse and complement alignment (blue) are indicated.

Supplemental Figure 4. Phylogeny of the subclade 3.3.1 extracted from the global tree.

Continent and Country of isolation are represented on a colour coded on as indicated on the key

Supplementary Figure 5. Phylogenetic relationship of genotype 4.3.1 S. Typhi strains isolates from Zimbabwe and globally dispersed locations. Maximum likelihood phylogenetic tree constructed based on variation in shared nucleotide sequence with reference to S. Typhi CT18 whole genome sequence assembly. Year of isolation, continent of isolation, country of isolation and genotype based on genotyping designation are indicated in concentric circles color coded as indicated in the key (inset).

Supplemental Figure 6. Root to tip regression analysis indicating temporal signal for the accumulation of SNPs within the 4.3.1.1EA1 clade.
