Mentorship narratives in a local congregation: a postfoundational practical theological study by

Zander van der Westhuizen

submitted in the fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

PHILOSOPHIAE DOCTOR
in
PRACTICAL THEOLOGY
in the
FACULTY OF THEOLOGY
at the
UNIVERSITY OF PRETORIA

Supervisor:  Prof JC Müller
August 2008
DECLARATION

I, Zander van der Westhuizen, declare that MENTORSHIP NARRATIVES IN A LOCAL CONGREGATION – A POSTFOUNDATIONAL PRACTICAL THEOLOGICAL STUDY, is my own work and that all the sources I have used or quoted have been indicated and acknowledged by means of complete references.

Signature
August 2008
SUMMARY

In this study narratives of mentorship are listened to and described from the local context of the Dutch Reformed Church Lynnwood. These narratives originate from the mentorship programme in the youth ministry of the congregation.

The research approach in this study flows from an epistemology based on narrative theory, social constructionism and a postfoundational approach. It is a practical theological study that aims to come to a greater understanding of these narratives. Based on the epistemology discussed here, I position myself within the framework of a postfoundational practical theology. Within this framework the praxis is the starting point of this research. This is local knowledge, interpreted and described by a community of co-researchers as informed by traditions of interpretation. The in-context experiences are interpreted and thickened through interdisciplinary investigation. This is done through a study of relevant literature as well as interdisciplinary discussion based on the theory of transversal rationality. At the end of this research process, alternative interpretations and suggestions are made that point beyond this local context and contribute to the larger field of mentorship.

The research process in this study is developed from the postfoundational practical theological positioning. Seven movements are used to listen to the narratives of the eight co-researchers participating in this study.

The narratives of the co-researchers lead to the identification of certain themes from their experiences that resonate with themes available to us in literature. The same themes also emerge from the interdisciplinary conversation in this study. These themes are critically discussed and certain questions are raised with regards to mentorship and the way mentorship is understood in different contexts.
The issue of language and how the various fields concerned with mentorship use language is discussed. It is clear from this study that the local context of mentorship in this study differs in certain aspects from other contexts where mentorship is practiced. The difference between coaching and mentorship is investigated and reflected upon.

I argue in the concluding chapter that from this context three basic foundation blocks for mentorship emerge. Firstly, the relationship forms the first basic building block of mentorship. Secondly, growth is the second basic building block and also the aim of mentorship. Although the way growth is understood may vary from context to context, it still forms one of the basic building blocks of mentoring relationships. The third basic building block is the fact that the mentorship relationship is reciprocal.

I suggest an approach to mentorship that emerged from the narratives of the local praxis studied. This approach is based on values. The following values are suggested as necessary in a meaningful mentorship programme or relationship: clarity, context, the ordinary, relationship, listening, adding value, reflection and ethics.

I conclude that mentorship is a landscape with many voices. The values suggested in this study can be used to construct the understanding of mentorship in a specific, local context. This is done with the aim to facilitate a meaningful mentorship programme or relationship.
KEYWORDS

• Mentorship
• Narrative
• Postfoundationalism
• Practical Theology
• Interdisciplinarity
• Spirituality
• Social Constructionism
• Postmodernism
• Co-researchers
• Narrative research
• Value based approach to mentorship
• Coaching
• Youth ministry
• Local congregation
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I hereby thank and acknowledge the following people and organizations for their support and help during this research study:

- Julian Müller for his friendship, wisdom and supervision on this journey.
- The DRC Congregation Lynnwood for allowing me to do this study in their context.
- The co-researchers of the study whom without there would not have been a research story:
  - Hanlie Bezuidenhout
  - Coenraad Bekker
  - Carina Bekker
  - Christa Smit
  - Barry Steenkamp
  - Roeleen Lemmer
  - Jeané Lemmer
  - Valize Scholtz
- All the mentees and mentors in the mentorship program over the past 5 years who indirectly also contributed to this study.
- All the friends and colleagues in the PhD group who contributed to a meaningful learning experience.
- The various scholars who took part in the interdisciplinary conversation and reflection in this study.
- My wife, Maartje who supported me in this research.
INDEX

Chapter 1: POSITIONING
1. INTRODUCTION
2. EPISTEMOLOGY
   2.1 Narrative
   2.2 Social constructionism
   2.3 Context
3. THEOLOGY
   3.1 Theology today
   3.2 Practical theology
   3.3 Postfoundational practical theology
4. RESEARCH
   4.1 Narrative research
   4.2 Design of my research
   4.2.1 A specific context is described
   4.2.2 In-context experiences are listened to and described
   4.2.3 Interpretations of experiences are made, described and developed in collaboration with “co-researchers”
   4.2.4 A description of experiences as it is continually informed by traditions of interpretation
   4.2.5 A reflection on the religious and spiritual aspects, especially on God’s presence, as it is understood and experienced in a specific situation
   4.2.6 A description of experience thickened through interdisciplinary investigation
   4.2.7 The development of alternative interpretations that point beyond the local community
Chapter 2: THE NARRATIVE OF THE MENTORSHIP PROGRAMME
1. DESCRIBING THE CONTEXT OF THE MENTORSHIP PROGRAMME
2. THE BACKGROUND OF THE MENTORSHIP PROGRAMME AND ITS DEVELOPMENT................................................................. 84
  2.1 The start of the programme .............................................................................................................................. 84
  2.2 The development of the programme ............................................................................................................... 84
  2.3 The contents of the programme ...................................................................................................................... 86
  2.4 The context of confirmation in the Dutch Reformed Church ........................................................................ 93

3. THE NARRATIVE OF HANLIE BEZUIDENHOUT ................................................................. 94
  3.1 Deciding to listen to the narrative of the ministry leader .......................................................................... 94
  3.2 Deciding to listen to the narrative of the programme ................................................................................. 95
  3.3 How did I listen to Hanlie’s narrative? ........................................................................................................... 96
  3.4 Excerpts from an interview with Hanlie .................................................................................................... 97
  3.5 Hanlie’s reflection on her narrative ............................................................................................................. 103
  3.6 My notes from conversations with Hanlie ................................................................................................ 105
  3.7 Reflection on Hanlie’s narrative ................................................................................................................. 107

4. IN CLOSING ............................................................................................................................................... 115

Chapter 3: THE NARRATIVES OF THE CO-RESEARCHERS ............................................. 117

1. THE SELECTION OF THE CO-RESEARCHERS AND LISTENING TO THEIR NARRATIVES ................................................................................................................................. 117
  1.1 Deciding on the selection process of the co-researchers ......................................................................... 117
  1.2 How did I listen to the narratives of the co-researchers? ....................................................................... 118
  1.3 The issue of language and confidentiality ................................................................................................. 121

2. THE NARRATIVE OF COENRAAD AND CARINA BEKKER ........................................ 121
  2.1 Excerpts from an interview with Coenraad and Carina .................................................................. 122
  2.2 Coenraad and Carina’s notes on their interview ..................................................................................... 125
  2.3 My notes from conversations with Coenraad and Carina .................................................................. 126
  2.4 Reflection on their narrative ...................................................................................................................... 127

3. THE NARRATIVE OF CHRISTA SMIT AND BARRY STEENKAMP ............................................... 132
  3.1 Excerpts from an interview with Christa and Barry ........................................................................... 132
  3.2 Christa and Barry’s notes on their interview ......................................................................................... 136
  3.3 My notes from conversations with Christa and Barry ........................................................................... 136
  3.4 Reflection on their narrative ...................................................................................................................... 137

4. THE NARRATIVE OF ROELEEN AND JEANÉ LEMMER ..................................... 141
  4.1 Excerpts from an interview with Roeleen and Jeané ........................................................................... 141
  4.2 Roeleen and Jeané’s notes on their interview ......................................................................................... 144
  4.3 My notes from conversations with Roeleen and Jeané ........................................................................... 145
  4.4 Reflection on their narrative ...................................................................................................................... 146

5. THE NARRATIVE OF VALIZE SCHOLTZ ................................................................. 151
  5.1 Excerpts from an interview with Valize ................................................................................................. 152
  5.2 Valize’s notes on her interview ............................................................................................................... 154
  5.3 My notes from conversations with Valize ............................................................................................... 156
  5.4 Reflection on her narrative ......................................................................................................................... 157

6. IN CLOSING ............................................................................................................................................... 161

Chapter 4: INTERPRETING EXPERIENCES AND HAVING THE DIFFERENT NARRATIVES CONVERSE WITH EACH OTHER ................................................................. 162
1. INTERPRETATIONS THICKENED THROUGH INTERDISCIPLINARY INVESTIGATION ................................................................. 163
  1.1 An interdisciplinary conversation ................................................................. 163
  1.2 The contribution of interdisciplinary conversation ........................................ 165

2. MAKING INTERPRETATIONS ABOUT EXPERIENCES AND THE NARRATIVES TOLD ............................................................ 167
  2.1 Deciding on how to involve the co-researchers in this process ....................... 167
  2.2 Notes on the group discussion .................................................................. 168
  2.3 Bringing all our reflections and notes together .............................................. 173
    2.3.1 Listing the themes ............................................................................. 173
    2.3.2 Deciding on which themes to discuss here ........................................... 174
    2.3.3 Making interpretations .................................................................... 175

3. TRADITIONS OF INTERPRETATION ................................................................. 189
  3.1 Deciding on the traditions of interpretation that are most relevant to this research ........................................................................... 190
    3.1.1 Listing the discourses ....................................................................... 190
    3.1.2 Deciding on which discourses to discuss here .................................... 191
  3.2 Describing and interpreting these traditions of interpretations .................... 191
    3.2.1 Mentorship ................................................................................... 191
    3.2.2 The culture of being busy .................................................................. 197
  3.3 Further study into these traditions of interpretations ..................................... 198

4. REFLECTING ON THE RELIGIOUS AND SPIRITUAL ASPECTS OF OUR NARRATIVES AND EXPERIENCES ......................................................... 198
  4.1 Describing the spiritual aspects that came from the narratives ................. 199
  4.2 Reflection ............................................................................................. 201

5. IN CLOSING .................................................................................................. 205

Chapter 5: A BRIEF OVERVIEW OF MENTORSHIP LITERATURE .................. 207
  1. Mentoring and coaching: tools and techniques for implementation - Meyer and Fourie .............................................................................. 208
  2. The coaching Bible – McDermott and Jago ................................................. 211
  3. John Maxwell .......................................................................................... 216
  4. Mentoring – Bob Biehl ............................................................................ 218
  5. Mentoring future leaders – Learning Link International .............................. 220
  6. Coaching to excellence – UCT Graduate School ....................................... 223
  7. Tuesdays with Morrie - Albom .................................................................... 225
  8. Biblical narratives .................................................................................... 226
    8.1 Samuel and Eli ................................................................................... 226
    8.2 Paul and Timothy .............................................................................. 228
  9. IN CLOSING ............................................................................................. 230

Chapter 6: DEVELOPING ALTERNATIVE INTERPRETATIONS THAT POINT BEYOND THE LOCAL ........................................................................ 233