Vision

Helping to meet the communication and information needs of government and the people, to ensure a better life for all.

Mission

GCIS' mission is to provide leadership in government communications and ensure that the public is informed of government's implementation of its mandate.

Strategic objectives

The overarching strategic objective of GCIS is to enhance the government communication system and its operations in ways that contribute to the process of further consolidating our democracy and taking the country onto a higher growth and development path.

GCIS approach

This objective will be achieved by having the following elements in our strategic approach:

1. Providing leadership in Government Communications and ensuring better performance by the communication system

GCIS must take responsibility for ensuring government is communicating interactively with the public and for the communication of government's vision and approaches to broad areas. GCIS needs to be at the forefront of analysis of the communication environment so that it can identify initiatives to be taken in enhancing the work of government and is also able to respond effectively when required.
2. Building a framework of communication partnerships informed by an encompassing vision around common development objectives

GCIS must take overall responsibility for promoting partnership amongst all communicators, inside and outside of government, in articulating a shared vision and value system for a caring society and in broadening access to the means of receiving and imparting information and ideas. This includes improving relations with the media and with communicators in parastatal bodies and the private sector, including in international marketing efforts.

3. Promoting awareness of the opportunities that democracy has brought and how to access them

GCIS will need to intensify the provision of basic information to the public about the rights of citizens and how to take advantage of government's socio-economic programmes as well as about the general process of policy development and implementation. Attention will be needed to improving the quality of information products and the effectiveness of distribution strategy in reaching all citizens, in every sector of society and every part of the country.

4. Promoting awareness of the institutions and programmes of continental and regional integration and development

Given the critical role of the regional environment and the development of our continent, GCIS should encourage and lead campaigns across government and society to enhance public awareness of developments in the region and the continent and promote engagement with regional and continental institutions and programmes.

5. Communication research and information

The government communication system as a whole needs to base its work on soundly researched approaches. GCIS will play a key role in identifying areas of communications research as well as receiving relevant research reports from other sectors. Furthermore, intimate knowledge of government's policies, programmes and implementation is essential to further enhance communication. There is therefore a need to package information on government's programme of action.

Key Issues

In pursuing the elements of this approach, while giving ongoing attention to a range of actions, GCIS will pay special attention to certain critical communication initiatives which should catalyse a general enhancement of the communication system and its operation.

1. Providing leadership to government communication and better communication performance by the state.

Special attention to:

- Strengthening and integrating the government communication system. This will take the form of Head of Communications being part of the pool for project leaders, taking greater responsibility for transversal campaigns
- Maintaining a clearly understood cycle beginning with end-of-year evaluations, development of Government Communication Strategy and Communication Programme, finalisation of departmental and cluster plans/strategies
- Improving across government the system of monitoring, and responsive and proactive communication around public discourse, along with partnership of GCIS with others in and outside government in building a value system for social cohesion in a caring society

Ongoing attention to:

Better integration across government in communication, budgeting for communication, and understanding of policies and programme of action

- Developing capacity of provincial and local government communication
- More effective internal communication in government including communication to enhance understanding of policies
• More effective tools of interaction with the public; improving the quality of our products; enhancing existing platforms and introducing new ones; and improving relations with the media
• Ensuring that the Imbizo approach of interactive governance takes root throughout government
• Better assessment of the impact of our communication, including peer assessment by communicators and the public
• Sustaining the GCIS Peer Review Process to ensure that in the medium term a uniform standard of excellence is achieved amongst Heads of Communications
• An active GCIS role in advising communication components on their development requirements and in ensuring that government communication capacity matches the needs
• Encouraging communicators to acquire the Professional Certificate in Government Communication and Marketing
• GCIS assistance in content development, branding and quality control over critical information products, including government websites
• Working with the International Marketing Council, GCIS must continue working to play a greater role in coordinating government's efforts and enhancing the communication capacity of critical South African Missions and including them in the government communication system
• Recognising excellence in government communications through the Government Communicators Awards
• Ensuring wider use of Bua News

2. Building a framework of communication partnerships

Special attention to:

• Working towards an active partnership among the country's communicators

Ongoing attention to:
• Better interaction with communication practitioners in parastatals and the private sector, and a new mindset and paradigm in government to relate to sectoral partners in both policy and communication processes
• Articulating and communicating a shared and unifying vision for the decade to 2014, informed by the new five-year mandate of government and with a common understanding of challenges and achievements
• Consolidating partnerships in Multi-Purpose Community Centres, (MPCCs), publications, Media Development and Diversity Agency (MDDA), International Marketing Council (IMC), training of communicators and other projects
• Ensuring that all of government communications, across departments and spheres, work in partnership informed by the common vision
• Helping to transform the media and advertising industry and through the MDDA helping establish and sustain community and small commercial media
• Developing closer relations with agenda setters
• Building partnership with the media, in particular key partners like the public broadcaster; implementing recommendations of the Cabinet/SANEF Indaba and sustaining such ministerial interaction
• Encouraging the replication of communication partnerships at provincial and local level

3. Promoting awareness of the opportunities that democracy has brought and how to access them

Special attention to:

• A sustained government-wide campaign on opportunities that have emerged with democracy, (across all clusters, not just economic), building on the campaign on economic opportunities

Ongoing attention to:
• Ensuring awareness amongst intended beneficiaries of the opportunities for socio-economic development that government programmes offer and how to access them
• Effective assessment of the reach of our communication and the quality of products, including attention to accessibility and language
• Strengthening unmediated communication including through radio; imbizo; development communication and a government publication
• Integrated communication through Community Development Workers; MPCCs and Gateway
• Better research into public information needs
• Combining communication in support of Second Economy interventions with communication to promote job-creating growth of the First Economy
• Enhancing relations between GCIS and the Policy Co-ordination and Advisory Services unit (PCAS) in The Presidency to achieve better understanding of the implementation and impact of government's programme of action, and of information and communication needs, so that GCIS is better able to communicate government's implementation of its mandate.

4. Promoting awareness of the institutions and programmes of continental and regional integration and development

Special attention to:

• Sustained profiling of the benefits of African development to South Africa and the rest of the continent

Ongoing attention to:

• Better government communication structures, working with NEPAD Secretariat
• Mobilising society to become active participants Promoting popular/stakeholder participation in continental/regional institutions
• Popularising the vision of a shared destiny for country, region and continent and linking national interest to mutual development
5. A more effective, efficient and well-informed GCIS

Special attention to:

- Improving application of research in the work of GCIS and government communication as a whole, and continued institutionalisation of project management in GCIS, both in service delivery and in the development of the organisation, through the Enterprise Project Management Initiative which must help ensure continuous alignment of GCIS to the needs

Ongoing attention to:

- Various forms of research to identify public communication needs, impact of government communication among the public and within the media
- Ensuring adoption of same methodologies across government, and improve integration of the research agenda
- Developing a set of core competencies which its communicators must possess
- Better and fuller use by GCIS of Information and Communication Technologies (ICTs), both in the management of the organisation as well as in communication
- Using all measures, including development plans and clear target setting to enhance the performance of staff and the attainment of excellence
- Greater integration of work by the different components
- Instilling in GCIS the culture of learning from our experiences

His complaint is that he has been jobless since 1997, when he was retrenched by Transnet. A number of his former colleagues are now employed by the Municipality of Empangeni, De Aar, among them the Speaker and the Municipal Manager. He has tried several times to get government employment, but was told that he has had his chance and that he must stand back for the younger generation. He is only 55 years old and feels he can still work. He feels he is being discriminated against in comparison to his former colleagues who have been employed again after retrenchment, and that those colleagues are taking the food out of the mouths of the younger people. He also feels that he is being discriminated against because he is a member of the coloured community. APPENDIX D: IMBIZO BROCHURE (Please turn over for a copy of the brochure)
APPENDIX E: GUIDING QUESTIONS FOR FIELD RESEARCH

(Please note that these questions served as a guideline when collecting data and making observations during field research)

1. What are government’s expectations from Imbizo?
2. How is Imbizo project managed?
3. To what extent are the local people consulted in the planning, implementation and evaluation of Imbizo?
4. What are the steps followed in the planning of Imbizo?
5. How is the awareness of Imbizo created in the community?
6. To what extent do people participate during an Imbizo meeting?
7. Are there mechanisms in place to ensure that the views expressed by the people are representative of all the people in the community?
8. Is there a follow-up mechanism to make sure that issues identified during Imbizo meetings are implemented?
9. What would you say are Imbizos achievements to date?
10. What are the challenges that Imbizo faces today?
11. Would you say that Imbizo is participatory?
