<tr>
<td>Technical skills</td>
<td>“Technical skills are vital – all business people should be comfortable with PC’s / IT.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Personal development</td>
<td>“People need to be confident in themselves, articulate, be a person of high integrity, be able to network at every level in the company.”</td>

| Knowledge management                   | “Knowledge managers developed extensive and detailed customer profiles by asking questions such as:
• How much do we know about our customers?
• How can we leverage what we do know?
• What do our customers require?
• Where are they going?
• What is their vision and future strategic direction?
• What is the range of relationships we have with our customers?” |
| Development/training/education         | “There is a great need to have a transition course that enables high flyers to function better in a situation where they haven’t had much experience.” |
| General management                     | “Managers do not know how to manage today and hence a consulting company can make a significant difference by instilling some discipline into an organisation.” |

<tr>
<td>Finance/bottom line</td>
<td>“Managers need to be trained to run their bottom line better and to manage costs better. They are great at meeting people in the lobby and making guests feel welcome but their business skills are poor and therefore they have little direction with their planning.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vision/global competitiveness</td>
<td>“SA managers are generally well thought of internationally because they can do virtually anything but they lack vision and leadership. They lack those elements of big thinking because they are not part of the global thought programme.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Succession planning</td>
<td>“Managers have never been taught to think. Are managers clear in their own minds what are expected of people and are they able to convey it to them? Managers have never been taught how to coach, or give feedback to improve performance so that the person develops.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Affirmative action/black empowerment</td>
<td>“Transformation of the corporate culture is a much more fundamental issue – is it inclusive enough so that black managers feel integrated or do they continue to feel isolated? It is worrying that this issue appears to have moved off the agenda of CEO’s – a tendency to think that the issue has been dealt with when in fact we are just beginning to deal with some of these issues.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loss of skills/Lack of skills</td>
<td>“A lot of young, well educated whites are leaving the country. They are not emigrating, they are just leaving. We now have to transfer skills from one generation to the next.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medium company sector</td>
<td>“… the need to create larger amounts of medium sized companies in South Africa is essential for growth and”</td>

<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Team management</td>
<td>“Have management and executives have confidence to engage each other, ask questions without ridiculing others, not to play politics and really learn about the different areas within the organisation so that the organization would benefit by the team addressing a problem or issue.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Measurement of performance</td>
<td>“Managers do not know what to measure to improve performance down into the organization.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leadership/people skills/relationships</td>
<td>“Management in South Africa has good technical skills but lacks people skills. Managers care only about the bottom line and don’t care about relationships or building organisational culture – yet it is essential that we take people along with us.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cultural links</td>
<td>“Cultural links with all the different population groups in the broadest of terms are lacking. Most white managers have no experience of professional Black people. These managers shouldn’t be surprised that there are good black professional people available for key jobs.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communication</td>
<td>“Knowledge sharing and effective leadership will create a culture where knowledge will flow – encourage people to share information.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Integration of knowledge/practical versus theory</td>
<td>“Too often MBA’s can’t integrate their knowledge into their organisations or translate it into real practice.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Emotional intelligence</td>
<td>“… you need to have a broad mind in order to understand the role of business in society. Too often business in South Africa is seen as an end in itself and big business tends to see society’s role as satisfying business rather than the other way around.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innovation</td>
<td>“One of the most important areas for business to concentrate on is in the area of innovation. This requires training and adaptation to new ideas and new trends, especially in the workplace. People need to be encouraged to be innovative.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous</td>
<td>“The new managers are specialists doing specialised work but across the board – they are cross-linked and can take on another role if necessary. For example, the finance director needs the flexibility to be able to interact with customers and factories. All managers need to be able to manage knowledge.”</td>

Prevalence of training provided to employees (including executives and managers) in large South African companies (ASTD Global Network South Africa, 2003:34-35).

The underneath table provides an “indication of the availability of certain types of training to employees in South African companies. From this table we can see 100% of respondents indicated that Employee induction and Leadership/Management training are provided to employees whereas only 15% of companies provide training on Self-directed learning skills and 20% of companies provide training related to Ethics.”
