SUMMARY

All human beings are endowed with unique talents and potentialities, and are able to bring to life the hidden gifts or the talisman within them. Being in the prime of their lives, youth should be engaged in developing themselves, acquiring virtues, and striving for excellence. Reports from schools and other sources, however, indicate that many South African youth have become prey to various social ills, such as teenage pregnancy, violence, crime, and drugs and alcohol abuse, which inhibit them from achieving their talisman.

In response to this situation, a life skills programme was designed to awaken the sense of talisman in youth. Believing that all human beings are gifted with special talents and potentialities, the Youth Enrichment Programme (YEP) aims to improve and transform the cognitive, social, and moral behaviour of youth, thus bringing them closer to the state of talisman. The programme intends to equip youth with values and skills that improve their social, moral and cognitive behaviour, so that they can become responsible citizens in a united and peaceful society. It pays special attention to the moral and spiritual aspects of the learners, aspects severely neglected by most education systems.

The principles of YEP are founded on the spiritual nature of man, the oneness of mankind, unity in diversity, and equality. The programme adopts transformational and multi-domain teaching strategies to transform learners through interactive critical assessment of values in the context of real-life moral and social issues.

The main purpose of this study was to analyse and evaluate YEP in terms of its influence on the cognitive, social, and moral behaviour of adolescent learners and to determine its strengths and weaknesses. Various aspects of the programme were investigated, including its underlying theoretical principles, methodological approaches and design characteristics.
The researcher evaluated the influence of the programme on the behaviour of adolescent learners in five institutions in two provinces. The qualitative and quantitative data from the learners, teachers and facilitators in the five case studies showed that the programme had a positive influence on the learners in the cognitive, social and moral domains. It broadened their view of life and developed problem solving skills in the cognitive domain, enhanced their communication skills and co-operation in social domain, and improved their general moral behaviour especially in the areas of trust and respect in the moral domain. Overall, the effect of the programme was most prominent in transforming the moral behaviour of the learners, bringing some of them closer to their state of talisman.

The study also discovered three unexpected phenomena – the beneficial role of peer learning facilitation, the positive effect of facilitation on the young facilitators, and the salutary effect of the programme on the general learning atmosphere in the schools.

Key words: youth, talisman, transformative learning, social domain, moral domain, spiritual domain, cognitive domain, emotional domain, multi-domain teaching strategies, life skills
DEDICATION

This humble endeavour is dedicated to all:
The youth who are struggling in the darkness in search for light;
Those educators and adults who in spite of all odds serve the youth day by day, tirelessly;
Those who believe in dreams and work hard to make them come true;
Those who believe in humanity and serve it;
Those who believe in the Supreme Talisman in people.

May we all be able to fulfil the purpose for which we were created, and when our time is up that we stand in front of Him with our heads held high.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The process of completing this thesis has been a long journey, with many ups and downs. I would have not been able to have my dream come true had it not been for:

- God’s blessings and confirmation;
- the belief in a Faith that inspired me to aspire for high goals and to look beyond myself;
- all the friends and well-wishers who prayed for this project;
- my family who put up with my neglecting them;
- my promoter, Professor D.M. de Kock, for her sincere and kind support and guidance during the study;
- Ms M.C. Mauer at the Department of Statistics, University of Pretoria, for her patience in analysing the research data; and
- Ms Karin Pampallis for editing the thesis.

Chapter Two:
Identifying the Needs of South African Youth: The Relevance of YEP

2.1 Relevance of YEP to the youth problematique in South Africa
   2.1.1 Introduction
   2.1.2 Teenage pregnancy
   2.1.3 Alcohol and drug abuse
   2.1.4 Violence
   2.1.5 Suicide
   2.1.6 HIV/AIDS
   2.1.7 The relevance of YEP

2.2 Relevance of YEP to factors contributing to the youth problematique in South Africa
   2.2.1 South African factors
   2.2.2 Global factors

2.3 Relevance of YEP to the educational needs of South African youth
   2.3.1 The need for moral and spiritual education
   2.3.2 The need for social education
   2.3.3 The need for cognitive education

2.4 Relevance of YEP to the goals of outcomes-based education
   2.4.1 Critical outcomes
   2.4.2 Specific outcomes

2.5 Conclusion

Chapter Three:
Exploring the Philosophical and Theoretical Framework of YEP

3.1 The philosophical underpinning
3.2 The old world order
   3.2.1 One-sided rationalism
   3.2.2 Individualism
   3.2.3 Materialism

3.3 The new world order
   3.3.1 Introduction
   3.3.2 Characteristics of the new world order

3.4 The philosophical principles of YEP
   3.4.1 Humankind is spiritual and noble in nature
   3.4.2 Humankind is one
   3.4.3 Unity in diversity
   3.4.4 Human beings are equal
3.5 Educational perspectives
   3.5.1 The purpose of education
   3.5.2 The aims of a life skills intervention programme
   3.5.3 The learner
   3.5.4 Peers

   4.4.2 Cognitive domain
   4.4.3 Social domain
   4.4.4 Moral domain
   4.4.5 Emotional domain
   4.4.6 Spiritual domain
   4.4.7 Summary
4.5 Relevance of the multi-domain teaching strategies of YEP
4.6 Conclusion

Chapter Five:
The Design of YEP
5.1 Introduction
5.2 The structure of the YEP curriculum

5.3 The structure of the themes
  5.3.1 Section A: questions and posing the problem
  5.3.2 Section B: expressing ideas and discussions
  5.3.3 Section C: evaluation of quotations

5.4 The learning domains
  5.4.1 Transformatory cognitive domain
  5.4.2 Transformatory social domain
  5.4.3 Transformatory moral domain
  5.4.4 Transformatory emotional domain
  5.4.5 Transformatory spiritual domain

5.5 Implementation techniques
  5.5.1 Setting the scene for the YEP sessions
  5.5.2 Techniques for effective implementation of the themes

5.6 Transformational design patterns
  5.6.1 Three-level learning design
  5.6.2 Vertical and horizontal learning design
  5.6.3 Inside-out design

  5.7.1 The role of the learner
  5.7.2 The role of the facilitator
  5.7.3 The role of peers
  5.7.4 The classroom

5.8 Special features of YEP
  5.8.1 Flexibility
  5.8.2 Simplicity
  5.8.3 Individualised learning

5.9 Analysis of a sample theme
  5.9.1 The example – Theme Nine: Drug Abuse
  5.9.2 The analysis

5.10 Conclusion

Chapter Six:
The Research Design and Case Studies

6.1 Research design and methodology
  6.1.1 Research design
  6.1.2 Research methodology
  6.1.3 Objectives of the empirical research
6.6.1 General information 195
6.6.2 Implementation method 195
6.6.3 Student evaluation of YEP 196
6.6.4 Facilitator evaluation of YEP 200
6.6.5 Teacher evaluation of YEP 200
6.6.6 Facilitator’s account of the facilitation of YEP 203
6.6.7 Outcome of case study 4 203

6.7 Case study 5: School D 204
6.7.1 General information 204
6.7.2 Implementation method 205
6.7.3 Student evaluation of YEP 205
6.7.4 Facilitator evaluation of YEP 209
6.7.5 Teacher evaluation of YEP 211
6.7.6 Facilitator’s account of the facilitation of YEP 214
6.7.7 Outcome of case study 5 215

6.8 Comparison of results from case studies 3, 4 and 5 216

6.9 Facilitators’ evaluation of the YEP curriculum 218

6.10 Summary of findings 219
6.10.1 Influence of YEP on cognitive behaviour 220
6.10.2 Influence of YEP on social behaviour 223
6.10.3 Influence of YEP on moral behaviour 226

6.11 Conclusion 228

Chapter Seven:
Conclusions and Recommendations 231

7.1 The journey towards the talisman 232

7.2 Unexpected findings 236
7.2.1 Setting the learning climate for YEP 236
7.2.2 Peer learning facilitation
7.2.3 School environment
7.2.4 The young facilitators

7.3 Weaknesses of YEP

7.4 Principles emerging from this study

7.5 Contributions of the study

7.6 Suggestions for further research
