HONOUR

INFAMY

The King, as Sovereign of the Order of the Garter, has given directions that the name of the German Emperor, with others, should be struck off the Roll of the Knights of the Order. The Kaiser has proved, by his deeds, that he had no claim to be included in any Honourable Order, but he has made a name as the bearer of the banner of infamy.
THE GOVERNMENT AT LAST TACKLES THE ALIEN SCANDAL

ALL ADULT MALES UNDER 55 TO BE SHUT UP IN CAMPS

OLDER MEN REPATRIATED?

What About The Rich Germans In High Places?

All adult hostile male aliens (Germans, Austrians and Turks) to be interned if of military age (17 to 50).

All over military age to be repatriated, that is sent back to their own country.

Women and children to be repatriated in suitable camps.

Judicial Advisory Committee to consider applications for exemptions.

All the above provisions apply to non-nationalised aliens, of whom there are 40,000 at large.

Naturalised Germans are to be interned only in exceptional cases on the order of the Advisory Body.

The Government Scheme.

FOR OUR SAFETY AND THEIRS.

All Who Have Not Secured Exemption Will Be Interned.

Mr. Asquith, explaining his proposal, said that the Government were actuated by the desire that every possible safety should be given to the citizenry of this country which might be divided into two classes -

1. Naturalised, and therefore British subjects.

2. Those who were not naturalised.

Of the first class 20,000 were already interned, and 4,000 to 6,000 men and 10,000 women were still at large.

They proposed under existing circumstances to deal in all cases with the former for their own safety and the safety of the community.

All males of military age would be interned and all over military age would be repatriated.

NO NEW LAW WANTED.

This would not require further legislation.

They recognised that there would be cases that required exceptional treatment, and women and children in suitable cases would be repatriated.

They would, however, require to be excluded from these cases, but they would be dealt with on the general plan which is now before Parliament.

It was proposed to set up a judicial body on the lines of Mr. Beale's committee to consider which applications for exemption from the general rule of internment would be granted.

As soon as the military and naval authorities had made their selection, and the Order in Council had been fixed, all males of military age who had not secured exemption would be interned.

Exceptional cases, established to the satisfaction of the Advisory Body on the principle of being dealt with, and there must be power for internment in case of urgent necessity. (Read twice.)

Mr. Bosanquet, leader of the Opposition, thought that the proposal was a serious one. It would mean the internment of some 40,000 aliens, and the want of power for the internment of 20,000 in case of urgency was a real question. (Cheers.)

GERMANS IN HIGH PLACES.

Mr. E. McNeill thought that all Germans should be excluded from high places. His thought the excellent and patriotic example of Prince Louis of Battenberg should be followed by others.

Sir R. Cooper urged that it should be remembered that the great military achievements of the Zappelists were due to the fact of a German in high places.

The Prime Minister stated that he thought that the case of the Zappelists was quite similar. The Prime Minister referred to the recent Zappel cases, and said that there was a suspicion against a man who was right to refuse the high office, but that it was not sufficient to establish a case of internment as in the case of the unnaturalised aliens.

WOMEN AND SPIE PERIL.

Lord Charles Beresford On German Privy Councillors.

The bipartisan Hall of the Mansion House was completely packed last night when a remark- able and determinate protest was made by the Labour representation. In their protest the continued presence in the community of the alien Privy Councillors was emphasised. Lord Charles Beresford declared that the case was not that of the naturalised aliens, but that of the 40,000 aliens who had not entered into the community.

The speech of the right hon. Gentleman the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department had been so strain and unstricted. It would be a question of showing that there had been any facts that could be relied upon for the removal of the Privy Councillors.
GERMAN RESISTANCE.

To the north of Neuville we won some hundreds of yards and gained the road known as the Chemin des Nervières, which runs from Neuville to Grenavay.

Our advance (itself, of which we were only occupying the southern part yesterday morning, while the enemy held the center and the north, our attack towards the close of the day, had carried us to the entire centre of the locality.

The Germans were then driven to the northern edge of the village, which we outflank.

Our troops with admirable activity and tenacity.

H.M.S. GOLIATH SUNK IN THE DARDANELLES.

Over 500 Lives Lost in Torpedo Attack; 180 Saved.

It was reported yesterday by the H. O. of Commons yesterday that H.M.S. Goliath had been torpedoed in the Dardanelles.

The Goliath had been ordered to surrender; 500 lives were lost.

Submarine reported that she sunk two Turkish gunboats and a large shore battery.

The Goliath was torpedoed on Wednesday night, with her admiral, in a torpedo attack by destroyers.

She was protecting the flank of the French invasion.

The B4 had penetrated the sea of Marmora (between the axis of the Dardanelles) some time ago.

The announcement of the sinking of the Turkish gunboats at Constantinople was received with great regret.

OLD BATTLESHIP OF 12,000 TONS.

The Goliath was a battleship launched in 1898, and completed in 1900.

She was at Chantiers, and is the second of a new class, of which the Campean was the first.

Her displacement was 12,000 tons, and she was therefore one of the smallest of the battleships on active service.

Her main armament consisted of ten 42-inch guns, mounted fore and aft in battleship form. As secondaries she had eight 6-inch, two 9-inch guns, half of which were fixed on either broadside, making a total broadside of four 12-in. and six 6-in. guns.

Old Goliath was commissioned at Sheerness in April, 1899.

Haldane Says We May Have To Recon­sider Our Position.

"We are fighting in perhaps the most tremendous war of history, and we are fighting for our lives. Even though we may think that under ordinary conditions in time of peace the voluntary system is a system from which it would be most difficult to depart, yet we may have to reconsider the situation in the light of tremendous necessities with which the nation is confronted."
The war has dealt hardly with these Scottish Canadian soldiers, who are seen saying farewell to the Treasurer of Musselburgh, their native town. Reading from the left, Private George Orr, Winnipeg Rifles, has been "gassed" and owes his life to a silk handkerchief given him by a girl cousin; Private R. Wilson, Winnipeg Rifles, killed; Mr. Wm. Simpson (treasurer), Private V. Orr, Canadian A.M.C., still fighting; Private J. Colville and his brother, Archie, both "gassed."

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER

THE Government took two steps yesterday which ought to have been taken on the first day of the war. They announced a measure for putting alien enemies under arrest and for reducing their conversion to the principle of universal service.

These announcements are anything more than a series of words, Great Britain is for the first time in history within the war. For the first time, the national struggle is so obvious that it is inevitable, not only for anybody but a politician to overlook it. The old wars were won by professional soldiers and nations in arms. Armies are brave. Our own, we know, is one of the bravest in the field. But there is a difference in numbers, and numbers only, which account.

GERMANY had an immense reservoir of men last August. It is not yet exhausted. Whether the Russians are temporarily beaten or not, Germany will be able for some months to send new hordes against the Allies. If they try, their net will be so large that all the German war news channels may expect very soon to see a new peril approaching. Germany will concentrate practically all her forces; then may land in the West, as she planned at the outset.

Yet there is a limit even to the German numerical reserve. Her reservoirs will run dry. France will inevitably reach the same position in a longer or shorter time. Two Powers alone, Russia and Great Britain, have supplies of men which their longest campaign cannot exhaust. Great Britain is the only one which has taken no steps yet to utilize the immense reserve of strength she possesses.

The measures against aliens fade into relative insignificance beside the determinations of the powers last to try every man in some capacity. But they are a welcome evidence that the Government is beginning to understand the needs of the country, as they are an elementary precaution in a time of national peril.

The weak point of the Government plan for alien control is its Committee. This Government is fond of Committees. What is wanted is a Court. This Court must be strong, impartial, and free from suspicion. Let them be.

Savaged Fisherman's Life.

"Do you ever hear how Queen Anne plunged into the sea?"

A fisherman, up to his chest in the water, was trying to beach his boat. Suddenly he plunged, the man fell into the sea, and no doubt died. Everyone supposed him to be a suicide; but witnesses, who had seen him come in, said he was not at all in the least suiicidal. After he was out of the water, down on his knees, and crying, he said, "I am very grateful to Heaven which not only delivered me from the drowning man, seized hold of him, and brought me within a short distance of a sullenly galleries of Burleigh House. He was not garbed as he is represented in the ancient paintings, which account for the fact that so many people were aware that the famous connoisseur was in reality, he had very little there, all the same.

Among The Scottish Pictures.

The Scotch amnesties have been good a deal of attention to the works of the artists. Mr. J. P. Crichton, B.A., is represented this year by six examples, mainly pastoral subjects and landscapes. Lauder spent some time before his "Egyptian Market," and "A Midnight Ride" also came in from a certain point over against the garden wall of Downing. "Portrait of a man" and "Sailors at work" on the top of the centre, made tower of the Admiralty. The figure, of course, really in that last Mary that may make thousands of us laugh on a day of great gloom.

The Chamber Of Horrors.

Wtihout a subject I am reminded that Madame Tussaud is in great trouble. People are writing to say that the Kaiser's presented fair should be put in the Chamber of Horrors. It seems to me an objectionable effect of the war that there is some danger that the wax may run out. If the Kaiser, the other day, I am told, went up to the Admiralcy and smashed his fair! the "buttons." Do you know where the "buttons" are? London. It is at the entrance to the Suffragist Club in York street, St. James's square, in gorgeous green and regal gold clothes he discovered that the place was a mine on the alms of the club. The suffragists, "buttons" who in only fifteen years old, is the only man now employed by the Suffragist Club.

At seven o'clock the other day, I am told, "Buttons" in the matter of uniform, for the contest, and a dance on her livery.

Blind Man's Buff.

"Buttons" of a German friend of mine recently encountered a dozen wounded soldiers, the programmes being gossips and tea. One, less savoury than the rest, said, "Yes, that's all right. The尚书 turned indignantly upon her, whispering, "Don't you know the King's picture? It was blinder?" But you obviously interpreted, "Blind Man's Buff, by all means, and I'll be 'er" first. I can play without a bandage.

Stories Of Atrocities Told By British Soldiers.

IRREPUTABLE EVIDENCE OF GERMAN BRUTALITY.
An appendix to the Report on Alleged German Outrages, prepared by Lord Bryce's Committee, issued last night, is full of harrowing details of the torture and ignominy to which the helpless Belgian people were subjected by the invading hordes. Drunken orgies, the public violation of women and girls, and the indiscriminate massacre of persons of both sexes and all ages, are only a few details. The examples quoted in yesterday's Daily News are amplified and multiplied a hundredfold.

In addition to the atrocities reported, it is stated that civilians and soldiers are numerous instances of violence done in France contained in depictions taken from British soldiers by Professor J. H. Morgan.

Here are a few instances of the horrors to which our soldiers testify:

The girl, just nine, had been carried by the enemy for five miles and was sold by her mother (aged 7 months) to an Arab for 40 francs. The Arab sold her to a Bedouin, who sold her to another Bedouin, and so on, until she was carried across the desert by a Bedouin woman. The girl died from exhaustion and thirst.

On the 1st of the month, a British soldier was ambushed by a group of Turks. The soldier was killed, and his body was thrown down a pit. The Turks then formed a circle around the pit and shot the body with their rifles.

A little Danderine immediately tones down the lumps and dandruff:

HEROIC AGrippa's PAYNE STAKES

All the talk of Newmarket yesterday was of the Payne Stakes which had cropped up in Parliament as to whether legislation should be introduced to stop racing.

The men who support racing will, of course, be charged with being bigoted in their opinions, but even Mr. McKenna cannot say they were not patriotic to the last degree.

The home trains which were expressed yesterday were sharp and to the point, and perhaps had Mr. McKenna been present what he should have heard would have surprised him.

It can be taken for granted that the men who have suggested a stoppage of racing are not informed as to the facts, and though they do not realize it they are undertaking something of the utmost importance to new movements in politics.

The Jockey Club knows its own business, and it has decided that it is in the interests of the country and the community at large to keep the game going.

It is not for us to suggest the policy which should be adopted by the Government; it is to be hoped, for the benefit of everyone concerned, that they will do nothing rash.

I fear that Sir W. Harcourt will be asked whether any complaints have been made about racing in Ireland interesting in any way with the movements of troops or other necessary war activities etc., and whether he will, in view of the importance of stopping racing in Ireland, take steps to see that Ireland will be excluded from any restrictions which may be imposed in Great Britain.

AN EASY PAYNE STAKES.

Summer Thyme and Heroic Agrippa had met at Newbury, when the former had four lengths the better of the latter. In the Payne Stakes Heroic Agrippa had a pull of 20 and there was an extra half mile to cover.

The increased distance made all the difference, for after Summer Thyme had shown up well for a mile and a quarter, Heroic Agrippa distanced the favourite in easy fashion. The result was one of the high-priced yearlings of 1901, Mr. Mortimer Singer giving away 80 for his entry.

Parabloon never once looked like justifying the odds laid on him in the Ascot Plate, but he streaked off at midfield and was unbalanced most of the way.

This seemed to leave the way open for the veteran Harrow's Beauty, and he was sent off at 6 to 1 to catch the three-year-old Parabloon, about whom some doubt existed as to his staying power.

The Three-Year-Old Hardwick was sent over a mile and a half and the Belgians thought Baccaro certain to get the distance. The colt, however, was jaded before the close by Angelo, who really ought not to have won.

Lilacs Filly could have won as readily with the winner out of the way.

CANYON IS SMART.

Mr. P. F. Fleetwood, the owner of the Bayford Stakes, was incensed in the market, in which Caynon and Shropshire Front fought a bitter battle.

Caynon, however, Sharp Fred never looked like getting a place.

Caynon, on the other hand, was always travelling strongly, and when he struck at the moment the race appeared to be over, he was jostled before the close by Caynon, who really ought not to have won.

There was a panel at ten against the Bayford Stakes winner, King's Day, and West in the Epsom Stakes and the former got the better of it by two lengths, with the favourite, Fougasse, third, a head away.

CHAPTER XIV

"It Is True."

By the time that Andor turned the corner of the house into the street he found that the news of his arrival had already spread through the village like wildfire. Klara Goldstein's pretty teagoods had been at the Post for some time; she had quickly disseminated the news that the wanderer had come home, and he did not deny that the mail-coach and letters of misfortune in her last arrival caused her to say nothing to Andor about Elza's coming wedding. She merely told the story of her spinsterhood when she came across that her own Elza had come back, just as she once, had always declared that he would.

Andor's old house had not changed in the street circuit; here was too glorious an opportunity to shout and to show his return to be lightly missed. And or had always been popular before. He was doubly sorry now that he had come back from America, for there may have been, and had made a fortune there; he shook those hundred and fifty hands before he could walk as far as the post office. The general who had just arrived by train from Ariad did not allow to proceed straight to his bungalow. They were made to figure in the great open place before the church made to unpack their instruments and then there, and to empty their tiny packed March without much sides in honor of the finest son of Marseilles, who had not returned, and had returned safe and sound to his native corner of the earth.

It was with much difficulty that at last Andor succeeded in escaping the general crowd running away from the series of ovations which greeted him when and where he was recognized. The women embraced him without further ado, the men wanted him to follow them tell some of his adventures there and then here. Andor had not wanted to leave the very much more wretched, uncomfortable and cold-atmosphere of the wide, wide world, it was an experience too precious in general and the village of Marseilles in particular.

The handkerchief, greetings of his old friends had the effect of soothing Andor's aching heart. The sight of his native village, the scent of the air, his smile, had acted as a slight compensation for the heavy load of sorrow which other wise he would have dragged down.

Perfect Peace.

With a final wave of his hat he disappeared from the extravagant gaze of his friends into the quiet, green, delicious garden. He stood still for a moment behind a hunk of clumps of tall sunflowers and humming-songs, to compose himself and arrange his coat, which had been undeniably quite a pace, and then descended on his friends in case they had missed his joy.

From the other side of the long gate came the hum of animated talk, his own name on repeated cries of pleasure, when the news reached some late-comers, and through it all the soft, pleasant strains of the eggs of the pigs, the crickets and the distant wailing of the birds, the murmuring of the plants, the rustling of the leaves, and the clattering of the passing motor car.

But here, in the small prebendary garden, the whole seemed to have stood back a number of times or more. Perfect peace; the dew of dreams and soft spring-time, the news of spring-time, the buds in the branches of the old mistletoe tree in the corner. Only the flies and the birds and the bees found something to live, and the air was heavy with the singing of the young and the sun's perfume.

Andor drew a long breath. He seemed suddenly to waken up; after a long, long dream, it was just over five years that he had stood once more in front of his old home, and the long, long desire of returning, the potent voice had returned a moment earlier.

But now, he had stood there for a moment and then crossed to the street. It was the day before he had ordered Elza to come in order to become her man, and he had come after Mass so as to say his last to the dead guest.

Now it seemed as if those five years were over and not over at all. After all, the summer, the two years in a strange, strange land, had been those days of a joyful calendar which had for ever embittered his happiness. It seemed as if he had not been true, as if Elza had been even waiting for him to go out for a walk with his unspotted, long-haired trees as she had done on that morning five years ago. Even now he pulled the bell of the Post Office, and the little church, and now as in his Pater Benignus himself came to the door. His wife had already been over the news to the prebendary of Andor's home-comings and his home-goings, and the farmer and the brewer had become so strong and so familiar. His too distant return, and his too joyous, would not have the last the tears which had so quickly come to his eyes.

"My dear, Andor, " the Pastor, said, when he had followed the old man, to the little post-office, "you know how I feel. It is true, or I would not have tried when first you embarked."

"What is true, by God!" answered Andor, as clear as a bell, as he filled the kindling up with the newest books. "It is true, or you would not have tried when first you embarked."

Add Andor knew that, at any rate, the business was indeed a dream.

CHAPTER XV.

"That Is Fair, I Think."

An hour later, Andor was in the street with the two friends, watching Elza as she walked toward the schoolroom in the company of her mother. Her fair hair shone like the gold bands from her neck, and her starched petticoats swung out from her hips as she walked. She held her head a little downcast, people thought this most becoming in a young bride; but Andor, who stood in the forefront of the spectators as he passed, saw that she held her head a little down because her cheeks were pale and her eyes reflected with tears.

Irma red dressed beside her daughter with the proud air of a queen, and on either side Maria, the mayor's second son, Pedro, who, father the water-mule on the Masor, and two other sturdy fellows were carrying the bride's parasol and the father shoulder high in his chain.

Just as the procession halted for a moment before entering the whitewashed subburb, Erica Bela, the bridegroom and hero of the hour, appeared coming from the opposite direction, and Andor saw her pass the lower house, appeared coming from the opposite direction, and America, or the rest of the wide, was clad in the new costume of these peasant girls, with their bare heads and high red leather boots and petticoats standing round them like balloons.

Andor frowned heavily when he caught sight of them; he had seen that Elza's pale cheeks had become almost white. He turned his eyes from the party limb around as if she were ready to cry.

Lusitania Survivor Marries Her Rescuer.

The bride and groom leaving the Registry Office.

A romantic sequel to the terrible disaster of the Lusitania was witnessed yesterday in the prosaic setting of All Saints' Registry Office, Manchester, when Mr. John Welsh and Miss Gerta Nielson were married. They were both passengers on the Lusitania and struck up a friendship which ripened into love. When the liner was torpedoed Mr. Welsh, clutching a lifebelt and placing her in a boat, but she fell in the water. He dived and caught her, and succeeded in saving her. The bridal pair possess little but their clothes, for Mr. Welsh lost his savings (£3,000) when the Lusitania went down.—(Daily Sketch Exclusive Photographs.)
