Some of the men who enlisted in the aviation services yesterday.

They all wanted to know how and where they could join.

Tfiey all want to follow the V.C. "ZEP." WRECKER.

Mr. F. Warren Merriam, the airman who taught Warneford to fly.

The wonderful exploit of Flight-Sub-Lieutenant R. A. J. Warneford, who destroyed a Zeppelin with bombs, has won for the daring aviator the coveted V.C., which the King conferred upon him, by telegram, yesterday. The "Zep." wrecker has caused a boom in recruiting, for yesterday the Hendon Aerodrome was besieged by crowds of men all anxious to join the Flying Corps.--(Daily Sketch and Birkett.)
Digitised by the Library Services, University of Pretoria, 2015.

The King has sent the following telegram to Flight Sub-Lieut. Warneford:

"I most heartily congratulate you upon your splendid achievement of yesterday, in which you led your small force to victory over a powerful enemy Zeppelin. . . . I have much pleasure in congratulating you and the Victoria Cross for this gallant deed."

The two Zeppelins were the last in a series of five which had been attacked in the course of the previous week. The deflection of the enemy Zeppelin and its destruction could have been achieved only by a daring attempt to bring it down by fire, and was an event of great importance in the history of the war. The King's message was a recognition of the Valor bestowing the Victoria Cross on Flight Sub-Lieut. Warneford, who, in a small craft, had, with his crews, destroyed a powerful enemy Zeppelin with a very small chance of success, and a great danger of danger.

"The Mak-FOYING A HERO, Service In Which Brains, Nerve, And Skill Are Chief Assets."

The unusual achievement of Flight Sub-Lieut. R. J. Warneford, R.N., has caused a great rush of men to enter the Air Service. They are being received into it at a rapid rate, and are being trained for the very important duties which lie ahead of them. The work is very tiring, and requires constant vigilance and energy.

A professional flying man has to undergo a severe examination and test to pass the doctor's scrutiny. The tests are conducted by medical officers and must be held under the supervision of a medical officer. In the present world of war, is it possible to do anything practical at all? The news from the Orient is not particularly encouraging, but the news from the East is equally important. The East is a very important part of the world, and it is essential that the Allies should take notice of the situation there.

The Zeppelin was a much-talked-about machine, and its destruction was a great event in the history of the war. It was a large balloon, and was able to carry great weights. The machine was driven by many engines, and was able to travel at great speed. It was a very important weapon, and was able to carry great weights.

R. Pattison & Sons, Ltd., Glasgow.
The first debate in Parliament on the munitions problem was not very illuminating. A regrettable feature was the element of suspicion revealed. Leaving aside party politics, the local munition interests, the discussion showed there is a strong feeling against compulsion either for local or central work. Meanwhile, however, it was evident that many of the speakers failed to take the national view. Having made their objection against a certain local interest or business, they were at a loss what to do. It was merely to put them on the defensive. They were at a loss how to give alternative schemes, and, as usual, Parlia dament proved itself poor at constructive work.

Now in this crisis the Germans will not let us drop our matter. We must find men and materials, or go under. How we are to get fresh men and shells is secondary to the vital fact that we must get them. It is no use for the political man to argue that there is no need of compulsion if he is not ready with as good a scheme for carrying on the war supplies.

But having established this point firmly and successfully, we must have to develop the full extent of which Lord Kitchener calls for, we come to the real problem how best to supply the factories. We must get munition politicians to talk about compulsion, but they must show first that they understand the problem involved. By force of arms the people are being called upon to surrender to-day; to-morrow it will only be a useless and dangerous mob. We shall not win the war by barracking the whole nation into the factories. Primarily, we must have a well-organised scheme, which will select suitable workers and apply them to suitable tasks under the best possible conditions. For present purposes we may leave the Army alone. Lord Kitchener is the man to deliberate upon this voluntary system. If it fails he will be the first to know. The order for conscription must come from him and not from the North-chapel Press. When he is ready to insist that he must ask for conscription the country will submit cheerfully.

The munition problem is different and more difficult. For this we want machinery, as well as men; and behind them must be an intricate system of raw material supply, transport, etc. It is a crying necessity for men and women workers in munition supply if the factories are not ready for them. We cannot wait to build new factories, and we cannot have things full of workers until the premises are adaptable to munition production.

Here is a nationalisation scheme which will work. The Government has taken over and will take over every suitable factory. This should have been a cut-and-dried plan before the war. But we are making amends now, and, from the critical part of the whole, we are already building factories.

Next is the supply of workers, and this is by no means the least difficult. For this we want real munition machinery, as well as men; and behind them must be an intricate system of raw material supply, transport, etc. It is a crying necessity for men and women workers in munition supply if the factories are not ready for them. We cannot wait to build new factories, and we cannot have things full of workers until the premises are adaptable to munition production.

A Chance For Every Needlewoman: £1,000 In Prizes.

£1,000 is offered in prize for the best pieces of needlework done by Daily Sketch readers. There will be a first, second, and third prize, and an entry must be accompanied by 24 coupons cut from the Daily Sketch. The competition will run from September to November next, when the competition closes.

All the work sent in will be exhibited, after which it will be exhibited, in a suitable hall in London, and, except in cases where the competitor desires its return, will be sold in aid of the Red Cross Society and the St. John Ambulance Association. A charge will be made to visitors to the exhibition, so that all competitors, whether their work is sold or not, will be helped in the wounded to some extent. It is hoped, however, that as many as can will give their best to the cause. At present the proportion of competitors who wish their work to be returned is less than 10 per cent.

Send For An Entrance Form.

All who wish to enter must send a large stamped and self-addressed envelope to Mr. W. J. Harris, 496, Great Italian St., W., London, E.C. 2. The envelope should be clearly marked "First Prize," and the name, address, and age of the sender must be given on each page. The form must be sent by 15th September. The envelopes should be sent by post, and the return of the work cannot be guaranteed.

BURN LESS COAL.

Patriotic Duty That Coincides With High Prices.

That is the patriotic duty of the public to economize in their use of coal in one of the recommendations made by the Economic Committee appointed by the Board of Trade for the reduction of our coal supplies.

With coal at its present prices, indulgence will be the spur to duty.

The recommendation is promptly by the shortages in colliery production due to the fact that up to the end of February, 130,000 men were kept out with the result that there was a net decrease in the number of pit workers 32,156, and output of 2,000,000 tons was lost.

If further labour is withdrawn from the mines by the committees recommended, the situation is really serious in order to affect the industrial position, and they suggest that the question of whether re-employment among miners should be further encouraged should be considered.

Belgian Steamer And 17 Lives Lost Off Margate.

As the result of a German submarine attack, the British steamer, Margate, 11 lives are reported to have been lost.

The vessel, which was 3,800 tons, was bound from America to Middlesbrough with iron ore, and was torpedoed about 30 miles off the North Foreland, and sank in half an hour.

Two officers and six men escaped. Among them were the captain, Mr. H. W. Morgan, and his wife and six children.

The two more Norwegian vessels were reported destroyed. They were:

- The Steamer, Christiansand, torpedoed off Helgoland, pilot picked up.
- Another Steamer, the Roma, 50 miles west of Fastnet; crew landed.
- Another Steamer, the Northumberland, sunk off Bergen, sunk by a German cruiser.
- Another Steamer, the Pentland, sunk by a German submarine.
- The Steamer, off Spurn by U.4.
- Another Steamer, the Yorkshire, sunk by a German submarine.

OPERATION HOUSE DOORS SHUT.

Last Minute Abandonment Sends Waiting Audience Away.

The sudden illness of Mr. Vladimir Roslov, who was to have addressed to Londoners in the Opera House, Francis; necessitated the abandonment of the performance last night. Mr. Roslov, a musician, was in Kingsway, a quarter of an hour before the curtain opened.

A number of people had been admitted to the hall, and preparations existed at other doors when a notice was posted outside expressing regret that there was a change in the programme and that the illness of M. Vladimir Roslov the Opera House would not be able to present a new programme to the audience.

The audience was greatly disappointed, but they had to submit to the situation, and the hour was then set aside for the opening of the London Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Vladimir Roslov was, the Daily Sketch learned, to be present at the performance, and was very anxious to see the new programme on their first appearance to-night.

It is announced that the theatre will reopen on Saturday with "Carmina."
At Peace With Their Little World

The session was at an end, and slowly the little procession filed out. Outside a brilliant sun shone high in the heavens, and the heat made the children's heads glow with excitement.

And so the little group left the church, the children accompanied by their parents and other adults who had come to see them off. The children were happy and cheerful, and the adults were proud of their offspring.

And so the little group went home, happy and content, knowing that they had done their duty for the day.

And so the story of the little group in Peace With Their Little World ends, leaving the readers with a feeling of joy and happiness.
