THE WOMAN'S PART IN THE GREAT CALL.

While it is the man's part to-day to serve his country, it is the woman's to watch and wait. This photograph—taken at the Horse Guards Parade yesterday—of a woman and child, patiently looking on while the crowds of young married men just called up in their groups, flocked into the recruiting depots, typifies the anxious attitude of Britain's young wives and mothers to this great summons to the colours. Yesterday the largest batch of married recruits, the men from 27 to 35 years of age, reported themselves for Army service. To countless thousands the call inevitably meant the breaking-up of homes.
GENERAL TOWNSHEND TELLS HIS OWN STORY.

Risks Run in Advance From Kut To Bagdad.

Ensign Sir John Nixon, replying, on April 11, to an Indian Office query as to whether General Townshend, formerly Lieutenant Colonel, had tested that the force at his disposal was inadequate, says:

"The decision to send two divisions from France arrived on October 24, and General Townshend had proposed abandonning the project as a view to the occupation of Bagdad, but General Townshend did not mention this to me. The force being placed at his disposal would be inadequate for the purpose of the war."

From Kut I sent the Major-General, General Staff, by aeroplane to the Secretary of State for War, on October 16, and on return gave no indication that I was to return. I was in doubt as to the adequacy of the force that would be available.

General Townshend's own story of the circumstances that led up to his bequeirement in the imperial service is told in a White Paper issued last night.

His communication was addressed to the Secretary of State for War, and, as a telegram from the Viceroy of India to the Secretary of State for War, dated April 10.

The telegram is one of several which passed between the Viceroy and the Indian Secretary relative to the matter that was before the War Office at Kut from Townshend had declared constant that he had insufficient forces for an advance against Bagdad when the letter was written.

The Viceroy, denying a suggestion that the Indian forces had been acquainted with General Townshend's objections, says:

"I consider this pointed out risk sufficiently, and deliberately.

The knowledge I had gained of my own opinion, absolutely necessary that the advance against Bagdad with my weak division had to be made.

It was not possible to reduce the output of the Whitsun holiday, that which the right hon. Gentleman, the Secretary of State for War, proposed to reduce the Whitsun holidays was no less than £30,000,000.

The conclusion that the Whitsun holidays should be restricted to two days at the most—Monday and Tuesday—and that work in munition factories and the shipyards should be temporarily suspended by the Government, was reached with a view to see that they would be freed from any obligations with the Whitsun holidays has already created a feeling among trade unions, not only of sympathy, but also of approval.

TWO DAYS AT MOST.

All was agreed yesterday that a holiday of several days at the most was necessary to meet the dislocation of the general system of output. This belief has since received additional support from members of the Government, the officials of the munition factories, and the shipyards.

This will be a distinct improvement on the conduct of a question which a prolonged strike on the part of the Whitsun holidays would have been.

The Ministers are determined that the Whitsun holidays should be restricted to two days at the most—Monday and Tuesday—and that work in munition factories and the shipyards should be temporarily suspended by the Government, with a view to see that they would be freed from any obligations with the Whitsun holidays has already created a feeling among trade unions, not only of sympathy, but also of approval.

LODGINGS ALREADY BOOKED.

One representative of a big union informed a Parliamentary Committee that the men would lose the trade unions if they would not lose the trade unions.

The Government's arrangements that the Whitsun holidays should be restricted to two days at the most—Monday and Tuesday—and that work in munition factories and the shipyards should be temporarily suspended by the Government, have not added to the advantage of a few companies, but were personally the urgent need for an increased output for the benefit of the men at the Whitsun holidays has already created a feeling among trade unions, not only of sympathy, but also of approval.

TOWNSEND'S HIGH HOPES.

Folly Of Allowing Ireland To Arm.

The principal witness examined before the Royal Commission of 1882, Sir John Ross of Blablands, who was Chief Commissioner of Dublin Metropolitan Police, in 1882, resigned in July, 1914, owing to the action of the Government, and investigated the case, was called upon as a witness at the Volunteers' Howe, an affair which occurred on August 28, 1914, during the outbreak of the war by the military in the streets of Dublin.

The rejection of the Bill was moved by Mr. Gretton, who said that the Government was getting its way only by unpopularity and increased in price and the immense number of soldiers who had gone to the front. Neither Army nor, as far as possible, the munition workers would be able to do for.

The motion for rejection was then withdrawn, and it was read a second time.

THE ROAD TO SOFIA

Angry Populace Denounces The Treachery Of The Government.

A swift transformation of the military situation in the Balkans, practically stationary since the French and British entrenched themselves at Salonika last September, was expected this week by the German-Bulgarian occupation of commanding points in Greek Macedonia. The places which have been seized are:

- Fort Rupel, commanding the pass through which the main road from Salonika passes to Thessaloniki.
- Duxen-Hissen Station, where the railway from Bucharest meets the Constantinople at the River Struma.
- Drasanz and other forts established by the British to prevent the further advance of this Balkan War, which were necessary to protect their territory of Eastern Macedonia.

These places had been occupied by the Greeks, and their importance for the maintenance of Greek independence was so obvious that it might have been expected that Greece would hold them at all costs. Angry and excited crowds in Greece are protesting against the action of their government, whose attitude is difficult to explain except on the theory of panic fear.

DIFFICULTIES THAT BESET THE INVASERS.

Frontal Attack On Salonika Positions Too Costly.

From G. Ward Price.

Salonica, Monday.

The enemy has at last invaded Greek territory in greater strength than by patrols.

A mixed force of Germans and Bulgarians moved into the region of Duzen, on the coast roads, as a preliminary to an advance on Salonika, it was said by Dimitri Hisar, a cavalry officer. The Germans appear to be in effective force and they will move in a long column, it is expected. The Bulgarians are said to be in effective force and the advance will be accompanied by artillery, which will be in effective force.

What does it mean?

It is to be seen what the effect of this move may be. It is a recognition of our difficulties to force us to adjust our way of things.

GREEK CHEERS FOR ALLIES.

From G. Ward Price.

Salonica, Sunday.

Large crowds of the inhabitants of Salonika made a demonstration this morning against the Bulgarian army, which was in the region of the town. They paraded the streets cheering M. Venizelos, the ex-Prime Minister, and the Allies. They then gathered in a square in the center of the town to express their joy at the Allied forces in controlling the crowd.

This action is an indication of the fact that the Allied forces, which are in effective force, have taken the initiative in this region.

How Britain Strove for Peace.

From G. Ward Price.

Sir Edward Grey Exposes German Chancellor's False Charges.

In a statement issued from the Foreign Office last night, Sir Edward Grey expressed his disapproval of the German Chancellor's statement that Great Britain shared the attitude of the Russian crisis in 1900.

Austria, by a stroke of the pen, annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina, and thereby arbitrarily altered an international arrangement. Great Britain, in protest against this action, decided to remain aloof from the war, the result was the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk.

Sir Edward Grey, in his statement, said that the public opinion would have approved war by Great Britain, but that is, for the moment, impossible.

The enemy's forces have been strengthened by the addition of more guns, and they are in effective force to repel any further German advance.

SUPPOSE LONDON WERE BESIEGED?

I HAVE just read a graphic account of how General Gallieni helped to save Paris in those terrible days before the battle of the Marne. For obvious reasons, the Government had quitted the threatened capital; and for reasons as obvious, though less estimable, all the idle rich, all the hangers-on, all the spongers and loungers, had gone too. They left behind them the Parisians and General Gallieni. He immediately issued a proclamation to the Army of Paris and the people of Paris, stating that he had received the order to defend Paris against the invaders, and that he would carry out this order to the end. Paris stood firm, and the crack of gun was heard quietly and calmly about its business.

"To the end." What did that mean? The report I have read states that the Military Committee had an interview with M. Millerand, Secretary for War, and asked him what he should do if the enemy succeeded in entering Paris. Millerand replied that he was to defend Paris quarter by quarter, house by house. And that if the Army of Paris were forced to retire to the south side of the River Seine? Then the bridges were to be blown up. Of course! If PARIS knew all these things, knew the terrible danger, heard the boom of the German guns—and went calmly and quietly about its business.

She knows what it is to be besieged.

In a generation before she felt the ring of Who Was His?

An elderly Hindoo gentleman, with a black crook stick and a turban, was enjoying yesterday afternoon in the Park. He smoked his usual unobtrusive, end-of-the-day pipe, and as one of a high degree gave him a respectful salute.

"Middle-class persons." It seems a great things nowadays to post people along the roads out of town in the cars joint-riding on Sundays. I notice that some of the classifiers make the statement that most of the cars appear to be owned by "middle-class persons." This intrigues me so much. When a car is passing you (not without dust) at anything over ten miles an hour, by what signs do you know, who, and where is the owner? The League is appealing for denials to be sent out parcels. Of course, the needs of our own soldiers come first; but afterwards the gallant Wounded Soldier Story.

Khit to Ruscinian.

If Mr. Ruscinian ever is going to enforce an edict against smoking in the streets, he will bring it in before Whitesunday. Because however desirable it may be for artisans, and so on, to have a little smoke on holidays, smoking factories have windows, and the spectators of the idle world do not care by in cars may have the happiest effect on the feelings of the workers. At least, it wouldn't on mine.

A Brigadier's Pipe.

The honourably plebeian officer whom I mentioned recently as travelling a country which has had a wretched time for a long while. The dinner parties, with their work, holiday, sporting, and munition factories have windows, and the spectators of the idle world do not care by in cars may have the happiest effect on the feelings of the workers. At least, it wouldn't on mine.

Air Nerves.

Air Nerves (I speak as one of them after my experience last week) are subject to sudden fits of nerves. I don't mean I have them, but as times as no apparent reason they have to descend. I was talking to a lunatic who has been brought to the Marine, and obviously as brave as they make them. "The other day I was flying alone," he said, "I was at the very edge of a man sitting behind me. I could have sworn that I saw him. Anyway, I couldn't shake myself. I had to come back. What is it?"

Cutting Down the Commandments.

If you don't know what we should do in these days if there were no Yanks to keep us merry. The good bidden, who have always had grace. One day there happened to be only one of the newest and shiest nurses at a certain hospital, and the staff was determined to help her out. She consented, and, standing up, urged, "Carry on!"

Some Smiles.

As a matter of course, the few days since we have been issued with a little food, the worst thing that can happen is a heavy line of troops. We have a brave Army, and let us be worthy of her!

A Night Club.

I know of a night club—one of the sad cases—one where, before you enter, you deposit your valuables in a small drawer. Once you're inside, you need only to know the key, after the fashion that holds in most Turkish Bathes. Whether the proprietor has another one I know not. But the plan might well be adopted in some night clubs of a larger and smarter growth, although the later thieves operate in most cases on a higher plane of finance.

Fleeing Officers.

While on this not very pleasant topic, I note with regret that the officers and garrison of a certain line have bubbled up again. I have heard that there is no reason why an officer or any other man shouldn't go. But I feel convinced that this is wrong is that well-dressed crooks should be allowed to promenade the West End, swaps up an acquaintance. I know this has happened, and lead their victims to a neighbouring flat, and flees them. How these crooks, of whom are well under 40, manages to dodge military service, heaven alone knows.

2400 Hull.

Paganini-like.

If ever a natural appearance fitted an actor for a part, surely H. H. as Pagani. The aquiline, rather sallow face, the long black hair, the slender, tapering fingers, and the whole manner, is an exact counterpart of such Paganini. The aquiline, rather sallow face, the long black hair, the slender, tapering fingers, and the whole manner, is an exact counterpart of such as I have seen of the great violinst. I understand that the play is written, and "H. H." is tremendously on keen.

Sunny Afternoon Plays.

We are all due respect to the Pioneer Players, I'm heartily glad that Sunday's performance was not one of the least successful shows of the season. On this occasion they had a play by "Michael Orms," who is M. T. Grein, called "The Bishop." But then, some of the critics have been so hard to please that there is no wonder that they have differed. By the way, the scene were staged to represent a play by "Michael Orms," who is M. T. Grein, called "The Bishop." But then, some of the critics have been so hard to please that there is no wonder that they have differed.

Iris Hoc's Performance.

The play was rather interesting, with some wonderful turns by Iris Hoc, who I liked. It was, too, a clever little story of an Irish doctor by Mr. Worsley Huies.

Smoking Free Of Duty.

The British Red Cross is doing valuable service for the harassed soldiers and sailors in war. At various depots throughout the kingdom the Society has placed miniature bond warehouses, where every conceivable form of "smokes" is stored free of duty for the sole use of wounded heroes in accredited hospitals.

The Memory.

Rattus pestiferous is the fashion devised by a girl I know of whose father was killed in action some months ago. She has had the bullet that killed him made into a ring, and wears it always.

Sir Frank Benson's Peer-Brother.

Lord Charles, who is to-day raising the question of the position of the Volunteer Training Corps in the Army, is a younger son of the late General Sir Charles, the new actor's knight. His title is only six months old. It is interesting to note that his youngest son, who was born a month ago before Mr. Asquith recon­ceived the foundation of the barony upon him, bears the Frisas, another brother of Lord Charles and Sir Frank is a member of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society. Lord Charles' full title, when he was created Earl of Charles, was Charles, 1st Earl of Charles, 1st Viscount, 1st Baron, 1st Lord of the Council.

THE matinee at the Palace Theatre, yesterday afternoon, was a brilliant success. This is all the more gratifying because it was in aid of the wounded and disabled Irish soldiers at the Command Depot, Tipperary.

It was a well-attended concert; and a goodly number of the audience were in the dress uniform of the Irish Guards, which is a very smart outfit.

Lady Garvagh, with a black dress, had a full house. The daily Garden hat, tied under the chin. Lord and Lady Strathloch (you know an old peerage was called out of abeyance in his favour) were together, she in black, with a touch of cherry red. Mr. and Mrs. George Finckelad had their little girl, Coral, with them.

A "Blackhead" Secret.

An instantaneous remedy for blackheads, oily skin and enlarged pores.

Blackheads, oily skins and enlarged pores usually go together, but can be instantly corrected by a unique new process. A tablet of styrax, obtained from the chemist, is put on the face and dried with a towel. The offending blackheads, of their own accord, come right off on the towel, the large oily pores immediately contract and return to their natural size.

The skin is left unirnured, smooth, soft and cool.

A few such treatments should be taken at three or four days thereafter in order to ensure the permanence of the pleasing result so quickly obtained.

Grey Hair—Home Remedy.

An old-fashioned homemade recipe restores youthful appearance.

There are plenty of reasons why grey hair is not desirable and plenty of reasons why grey dyes should not be used. But, on the other hand, there is no reason why you should have grey hair if you do not want it. To turn grey dyes should not be used. But, on the other hand, there is no reason why you should have grey hair if you do not want it. To turn grey.

The Real Cause of Most Bad Complexions.

"Health and Beauty."

It is an accepted fact that no truly beautiful complexion ever came out of jars and bottles, and the longer one uses cosmetics the worse the complexion becomes. Skin, to be healthy, must breathe. It also must expel, through the pores, its share of the body's effete material. Creams and powders clog the pores, interfering both with elimination and the growth of new skin.

For The Little Ones.

The Duke of Westminster is lending Grosvenor House for a matinee on June 5 for such a splendid cause—the Women's Hospital for Children.

THE PATRIOTIC FATHER.

"My Son Is Shining: Send Him To His Duty," He Tells Tribunal.

MARRIED GROUPS REPORT.

When a boot manufacturer appealed yesterday before the Northampton Tribunal for the personal exemption of a heel squeezer, the appeal was opposed by the workman's father, who appeared in the uniform of the Royal Horse Artillery, with three ribbons.

The workman had been removed from the Territorials as unfit, but had now been passed as fit for a medical board.

"He says he's fit to squeezer it; he ought to go; and I will see he goes," the father added.

The Tribunal gave a certificate for 11 days, the lad's employer saying that if he were taken away he would be discharged. The lad then got a certificate from the Board of Health to be delayed.

Married Men For Fighting Ranks.

At Great Scotland Yard the married man of 27 to 35 years of age reported himself for service.

"I cannot desert my convictions, not even to save my skin," one man said, "and I cannot pay your fine."

Sir Kenneth Scott, Lord Massie (32), son of the late Labour M.P. for Sunderland, when charged before the Metropolitan Bench at the Old Bailey yesterday at Smithwick charged with administering morphine.

After dinner the three became ill, and a rice and milk was taken. The rice was not mixed with any drug.

Tommy's Garden Club.

Mrs. Stuart-Denison—here is a picture—is interesting for several reasons. It is, she is a great-granddaughter of the famous Duchess of Gordon, after whom, it is said, the Gordon Highlanders are named.

Another is that she claims to be descended in the direct line from the wax, better known as Robinson Crusoe.

The book has been especially illustrated with new and original portraits of Miss Lily Elsie, by G. K. Chesterton, and Miss Gladys Cooper, by Miss Lilah McCarthy, by John Dicks, and Sir John Millais, by Lady Lytton, Lady Curzon, Miss Nancy Cunard, Miss Violet Keppel, and several other illustrious persons.

Prospect Of Great Race Between Colts And Fillies.

STARTERS AND JOCKEYS.

For the second year in succession the Derby, so long associated with the Epsom Stakes, will be run at Newmarket, but the war has altered many preconceived notions, and the event will really ought to be treated with caution. It is the belief of many that the race is not to be allowed to lapse, even though the Surrey switchback is not available. And after all the Suffolk Stakes course provides a fair test of early season form.

Today's field will not be a large one, but the present state of racing will no doubt draw a good card. The post.

JIMMY WILDE.

When Wilde turns in and toil is done, there will be a new hope for him. Wilde has been doing better in his last two races, and it is the opinion of many that he could do better if he had more time in the saddle. The mark.

SAYS PHOSPHATE DYNAMES AND STRENGTH.

Numerous notices have appeared in the Press to the effect that the regular use of phos-phate instead of drugs and medicines is highly recommended. It is claimed that phosphate is a substance which is obtainable by any good chemist, enjoys its great popularity because of its peculiarly valuable property of quickly restoring the strength and vitality of the depleted nervous system. Neurasthenia, neurasthenia, sleeplessness and physical and mental weakness are almost invariably due to insufficient phosphate in the body. This condition can only be corrected by supplying to the nervous centres the necessary phosphoric food elements, the lack of which has caused all the trouble. For this purpose specialists almost invariably prescribe taking with each meal a tablespoonful of phosphate, which, while being inexpensive, is undoubtedly the most remarkable nerve food and restorer of health and strength known to medical science.—Advt.

A Trick Of Fate

Ever since the accident, Ellen Marsh had been haunted by some nightmare recollection of Jim Straton—especially in the cab with the injured man—in the reception room at the hospital—she had been conscious of a certain mental uneasiness. Who was this big Australian soldier? Had she seen him before—and where?

And now it came back to her. She had heard a whispering-room at Heathervale Manor; she had felt again the sudden grip upon her wrist; she had heard his husky, menacing voice, and then that deep sigh of a stern face bending over her before consciousness had gone.

And this was the very man who stood facing her on the pavement outside the hospital by the side of the cab—the very man whose name Gordon Kemp had told her to employ in her interview with Hester Gervais... That encounters of the sort had appeared such a trifling thing—so devoid of all risk—and yet here fate had brought her face to face with Jim Straton... .

"You're mistaken," she stammered. "I assure you, you are mistaken, sir." But that was the only defence she could think of in her despairing situation. She would deny, deny—deny...

"No, I'm not," he said bluntly. "Hard swearing won't cut any ice with me, my dear. Your hair is like the mark of Cain. I'd know you if you'd kept burnt a hundred years." I don't know what you're talking about," she stammered. I've got to go home... ." But you were.

She made it to a hasty retreat into the cab, but with a kind of gentle roughness he caught her arm and pressed her towards him, and then closed the door of the vehicle.

In that's your first," he said to the driver. The cabman told him, and Straton gave him the money out of his pocket, and shut the man who made the other's face brighter with satisfaction.

"Good-night, driver," he said. "We shan't want you any more. This young lady and I am going to walk home." He would have protested, but not only was she frightened, but there was something so determined in Straton's voice and manner that she had not the will to oppose him.

"And you, the young man--by his side like some terrified child caught in an act of wrong-doing, and awaiting inevitable punishment.

Fate Denials

"Now, Miss Marsh, I reckon we'll walk and talk," he said.

He tucked her hand under his arm, and she found herself walking by the side of the hospital by the side of the cab—a trip which lasted several minutes neither of them noticed, Ellen Marsh too frightened and dazed—Straton apparently deep in thought.

"What did you do it for?" he asked suddenly.

"It wasn't a square thing, you know, to go and blacken the other fellow's name... ."

"I don't know what you're talking about," she answered. "I have no idea what you're talking about. You've no business to concern yourself with me... ."

A last desperate hope awoke in her mind—the last desperate hope that she could think of, for the moment. She would—if she could—take him down.

"You know the place you're talking of," she repeated, clinging desperately to her own means of defence. "I've never seen you before in my life."

"I'll tell you who you are then—just to show that I've got all the tricks in my own hand, my dear... ."

He stopped in the shadow of a house and stood towering over her, with his hands on his hips, arms akimbo.

Your name's Ellen Marsh. You were formerly employed as usher at the doors of Kemp and Co. You were dismissed by Kemp for making away with the key to the door of Mr. N. I., the collect of Mr. N. I., the collector in Kemp's employment that he gave you a receipt for a cheque of £50 which was drawn by a Mr. N. Iredale. Now have I got you?

"That's all true, isn't it?" he asked.

She hung down her head without answering him. "Why should I answer you?" she thought of the language which had prompted Gordon Kemp, and told her that you were the only defence she had against him. "If you must know—my dear, go to the police. But otherwise his facts were precisely correct.

Ellen Marsh Explains

"That's all true, isn't it?" he asked.

She hung down her head without answering him. "Well, now, my dear, supposing you tell me why you took the chance of coming down to Heston to see Miss Gervais?"

Ellen Marsh began to think furiously. This was purely a chance she had been given to her story which had promised Gordon Kemp; but if he followed her to the police, the police, of course. But then she had promised Gordon Kemp to get to the door of Miss Gervais. If she had made trouble for you... ."

"What do you mean to do me?" she gasped. "She promised, and told her that you were the only—and she promised me, too."

"If you made trouble for you... ."

Gordon Kemp had taken the chance to answer his answer.

"I'm sorry, she explained. "I was coming on such a sudden in that you promised, I was so upset that I didn't dare to think of it. I didn't know that I hadn't made trouble for you... ."

"What do you mean to do me?" she gasped. "If you made trouble for you... ."

"I'm sorry, she explained. "I was coming on such a sudden in that you promised, I was so upset that I didn't dare to think of it. I didn't know that I hadn't made trouble for you... ."

She realised the dangerous ground on which she stood. Did she do this what would Gordon Kemp say? He would know—must know—and he would forgive her for upholding his plans, whatever those plans might be. And he had promised her in his power to send her to prison... ."

"I was coming on such a sudden in that you promised, I was so upset that I didn't dare to think of it. I didn't know that I hadn't made trouble for you... ."
