THE DEATH IN THE CLOUDS.

A remarkable photograph of a French aeroplane bursting into flames from a well-directed shot from the German anti-aircraft gun. The pilot met his death in the clouds while gallantly reconnoitring over the enemy's lines in the Champagne region.

Private Henry Kenny, Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, who appears in this morning's list of V.C.s, is the son of a Hackney widow. On one day he rescued six wounded comrades who were lying exposed to the enemy's fire. He was himself shot through the neck, but when home never mentioned that he had been recommended for the Cross.

Capt. A. E. G. Kilby, of the South Staffordshire Regiment, another of the new V.C.s, it is feared, is dead. Though wounded, he led an attack under a devastating machine-gun fire and a shower of bombs.

Italian Girl's Sight Restored By Hypnotic Suggestion.

Hypnotic suggestions are responsible for many remarkable cures of blindness. Mr. Alex

Mitchell, a London hypnotist, has cured Miss Cattaneo, a London woman, of total blindness.

The patient is Miss Cettia Cattaneo, a 25-year-old Italian girl, who was born with one eye.

Medical aid was sought at English, French and Italian hospitals, but to no avail.

Two years ago, when she was accompanied by a nurse, she suddenly stumbled and fell.

Mr. Emmick saw the girl and in less than ten minutes was able to operate.

The operation was a success, but the liquid was kept in a bottle and given by injection.

The other eye was also operable.

The operation was performed, and the liquid was given by injection.

The patient is Miss Cattaneo, when the Daily Sketch saw her, she was able to distinguish objects with a small glass and right eye.

Mr. W. Thorne is to ask the Home Secretary if he will have a searching inquiry made into the case of Miss Cattaneo, and if he will make a report.

Mr. H. A. Barker is quoted as saying that if Miss Cattaneo is not cured, she will consider the matter.

Baffled Enemy Loses Heavily In Double Assault.

Pans, Thursday, 11 p.m.

South of the Somme we bombarded the supply stations of Courseloup and Hallu in the Chauny districts.

West of Noreuil an enemy aeroplane was brought down by our special guns. The machine fell in the enemy's lines, and 14 of the enemy's crew were wounded. The machine was set on fire, and its passengers were killed.

To the north of the Somme we bombarded the supply stations of Chauny and Mont-Cenis.

South of Bovesinghe, after a bombardment, a small party of the enemy tried to advance, but were driven back by our fire.

Pans, Thursday, 3 p.m.

To the south of the Somme we bombarded an aerodrome near Caen, and to the north of the Somme we bombarded the aerodrome of Vermandois—south of the Somme.

Our counter-attack drove them out immediately.

The west of the Meuse the Germans attacked repeatedly in the course of the night, but our positions at the wood of Avocourt were held.

All the assault guns were repelled by our fire. The enemy's infantry was stopped by the fire of our machine-guns, which caused great ravages in the ranks of the enemy, and in the course of the battle the aerodrome of Avocourt was captured by the Germans.

During the daytime of yesterday one of our aeroplanes attacked a large number of enemy aeroplanes at an aerodrome near Chalons.

Horse bombs were fired at the aerodrome of St. Eloi, and at the aerodrome of Berjtiger, near Chalons.

By this means, I know that thousands of enemy aeroplanes will be destroyed, as they cannot be repaired.

Every Bargain Broken By Men "Whose Objects I Do Not Wish To Go Into."

Mr. Lloyd George, replying to Mr. MacCullum Scott in the House of Commons yesterday, said there was no foundation for the statement that the Labour troubles in one of the factories on the Clyde had arisen out of the withdrawal of profits previously enjoyed by the shop stewards.

Some time after the scheme of dilution had been inaugurated in the works the workmen put forward a claim that the shop steward should be entitled to leave his work during hours in order to go into other departments for the purpose of inquiring into the work done by women, and discuss their wages.

This demand was a great extension of the strike previously enjoyed, and was objected to by the firm, who offered to grant reasonable wages to the strikers.

The men declined this, and although they were engaged on urgent national work for the Firth of Forth, went on strike.

The firm asked them to refer any disputes to the Clyde Commissioners, but the note refused.

Three more workmen have been arrested at the instance of the Ministry of Munitions and transferred to the East Coast. It is alleged that they delayed the production of munitions at a local munition factory.

WHERE IS THAT SCHEME, MR. LONG?

It is very annoying that when public figures are trying their best to keep the married men to their duty the Government should let us down. Mr. Long’s proposals for the relief of the financial responsibilities of soldiers were vague, insufficient and unhappy. The first married groups will have to be left to the care of the Cabinet to bring in a short Bill which could be rushed through the House in a few days— if not in a few hours.

NEVERTHELESS, a Bill on the lines so admirably suggested by Mr. Asquith and not charity; relief from our liabilities, not an insignificant reinforcement of our meagre resources.

The affair is a simple one. Mr. Long did not mention rates and other public charges. But, plainly, these should be scrapped in the case of all the poorer soldiers. Our country can afford such a measure. It may not be too great a cost. It were better they be distributed at the will of the Statutory Board, than useless. There are no signs of a plan in the Cabinet. The inquiry should be on the lines of Mr. Asquith’s proposals, and the methods, which are the methods of all such bodies, and the responsibility of making insufficient individual contributions to the Income Tax, not of the Charity Commissioners. Mr. Long told us so, instead of making a grant to a near servant in Singapore, as to the labour people. Let’s have the cards on the table.

The MAN IN THE STREET.

Echoes of the News

Prince Henry 16 To-Day—Flying Peer’s Nickname—Mr. Tennant’s Nephew’s Daring Flight.

Will Lord Selborne resign? I understand that a possibility that Lord Selborne will shortly resign his post of President of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. This is a matter of taking his own conversation with the military authorities in charge of the men from the land to the Army. A serious promise was attempted, but the war office have pronounced against all demands on them. Lord Selborne, as I understand it, has been closely associated with the men from the land to the Army. It is just an obvious and familiar example of a large scheme.

The Official Steamerroller.

We have the Board of Customs and Excise has at last decided to release some of the youngest war’s men for service with the V.R. They are to be replaced by men as far as is practicable. Thus the most conservative of the Government’s departments has at last decided to use the opportunity of the war to reorganise the work of the men. When it was the men he was immensely popular, on account of his lack of French accent, though. Mr. Long, we will not stand for a mere election as the War Office. We have to see that the plan does not receive that support in the Cabinet which he thought he had a right to expect.

Mr. Squire’s Grey Hat.

Two consequences of a spring in the West end yesterday— Open taxis and Sixpence taxis are still instead of a black one. The air was really balmly, and somehow smell of coming summer.

Military Cross For Mrs. Asquith’s Nephew.

One of the finest examples of the old list of service awards is that of Captain John Edward Tennant, who received the Military Cross for his services as a gunner. He is a nephew of Mr. Asquith and the United States, a cousin of Lord Selborne, and it was his younger sister who married the Marquis of Granby earlier in the year.

The Fact.

Although he mentioned no name, it was evident that he meant Mr. Long. But, he has not decided. Lord Tennant referred in the House of Commons on Sunday night. “Among those who show me,” he said, “made a descent upon a German Fokker. He was from such a great height that he had to change his course almost at the last moments. He got rather too low above the sea, so that when he dropped his bombs the explosion did not cause any material damage to his own aeroplane. When he had switched his engine on it would not start, and he thought he was right in the German lines. Then just at the last moment it went.”

Mr. Asquith in Rome.

Mr. Asquith arrived in Rome to-day. There are to be no regular conferences, but as Lord Curzon has gone with Mr. Asquith it may be assumed that there will be a good deal of useful discussion. Italian opinion seems very flattering by the visit, so that it may be expected to have good results. But when it is over, Mr. Asquith, we shall expect you back at work.

Married Men Scheme.

I FIND people very enthusiastic about the new government’s scheme, and the only thing that has pleased everybody is Mr. Long’s reading of the “War“ red letter. As the system of relief strikes one as cumbersome, and if we are to have another set of tribunals to which no one is to go, then we shall be talking still when the war’s over, as to who ought to take part in it.

Duty To The Army.

We are told in mysterious fashion that the Government has grave information about the Czecho-Slovakian situation. This is nothing new, but the story is that they will take a lot of bearing. “Fifty Years of a Northern Life” by H. E. have been published and the first of the “gifted author” on just being an old man to be replaced by Lord Grantham. You may take it from me that the war will be a thorough sore of Bohemian lore (this isn’t poetry).

Young Knuts and Old.

Young Knuts will like to know what the old Knuts did, and old Knuts will like to be reminded of what they did when they were young. Knuts and Grummers, the night clubs of the service and seven, have been replaced in the ranks. The clubs of the clubs have been replaced in the ranks. Hanging Sword Alley.

KYLE BELLEW added about the stage gracefully and completely as a duelling sort as Duval. But it didn’t seem to matter much. To be quite fair, the part was rather well played-—well, never mind, on the whole. The hanging, magnificently in The Arm of the Man, must be cut from the Bourchier part—wasn’t one; was I, I should imagine, far more French than Claude.

The Real Claude Duval.

A word up to the real Duval. His winning way with the women seemed to attract Claude—oh, rather their basis, as also the incident, introduced into the play, of his dealing a “coronet” with his nose, and the absolute terror to travellers, in spite of his gallantry, and most people were relieved when he was captured and had been drunk, at a tavern near what is now the Coliseum, and subsequently hanged at Tyburn, in 1808, at the age of 32.

Corporal Aubrey Fitzgerald.

My memory of his brain, a part of the late Maurice Fartoux has resulted in a postcard from Aubrey Fitzgerald, telling me a little more about her, a frivolous and rather desperate girl. He joined a cavalry regiment—the Middlesex Horse—the first week of the war was over, and has been at it ever since. He has now been invalided to Normandy, and holds the exalted rank of corporal.

Green Tummies.

I KNOW nothing of women’s fashions, which I leave to Mrs. Gosse. But I can’t help noticing that the women seem to make themselves very smart. About this time last year the craze was for scarlet overcoats, and the streets were full of young ladies in scarlet shillings, and now the women of the office or her factory in a green wooden “Tummy.” Ride on the top of a bus or train, and you will see women-folk—walkers—walking along the pavements. The result, I suppose, will surprise you, as the advertisements say.

Fashions At The Play.

The play fashions are still enjoyed by many, even by the women who look on in a renovated evening gown or last year's coat and skirt and a homemade-made shirt blouse. An economical but well-dressed woman takes careful note of what is worn on the stage, for here she can see the new lines foreshadowed and can judge of the effect of novelties as well as though she were rich enough to visit very frequently the big dress houses where models of mannequins would parade at her bidding.

Even "Stand and Deliver" at His Majesty's Theatre with its late Stuart setting is not devoid of fashion interest from the modern woman's point of view. The evening frocks of the moment are not without their likeness to those of Sir Peter Lely's day, and those worn in the play by the ladies of Whitehall will give hints for forthcoming gowns for their dowagers in Mayfair.

Stuart Gowns.

Miss Kyrie Bellows's gold taffeta gown in Act II. with its ornaments and hair-net of gold and monocromalia is a beautiful example of a period gown without the exaggeration of that period. In the last act, too, Miss Bellows wears an exquisite cream brocade gown opening over a richly embroidered petticoat and having small bunchy panniers. It did not seem a very convenient garb in which to fly to a new world with a reformed highwayman, but it had its points for the modern dressmaker.

Miss Bellows's brown velvet travelling dress with a cloak that fits closely at the waist and flares a little below it is another beautiful costume which, even to its brown hat with the sweeping feather, is not so far distantly in outline to the newest from Paris that it could not inspire a present-day outfit.

Bathing Fashions.

Bathing fashions are to the fore in "Mr. Manhattan," which was produced last night at the Prince of Wales Theatre. Jules Poiret has made for Miss Peggy Kurton a powder blue taffeta bathing suit, its scalloped edges trimmed with silver. Miss Iris Hoey has some delightful things to wear, including a panniered evening frock of deep blue tulle, with a diamante girdle and tiny bunches of roses on each shoulder. The cloak worn over this dress is of chamois panne, bordered with ermine.

A white gaberdine travelling coat and a negligee of white tulle and lace, with a green chiffon and feathered scarf, with a cord, are worn by Miss Hoey in the first act.

Mr. Lloyd George: It is not so. There was an attempt made by certain members of the House, but Mr. Addison refused, and I think quite properly, to have anything to do with men at that moment who had broken the law, and had suggested to them that the first thing to do was to return to work and not any government they would be fully considered in the usual war.

Lest. Mr. Lloyd George: The negotiations to which you refer had reference to any private matters.

On Tuesday evening, Mr. Addison explained Mr. Ramsey had instructed him to have it get at the state of affairs on the Clyde and his anxiety to do anything to get the grievance all joined him to see two members of the Clyde Workers' Committee who were in the House.

THE UNINVITED GUEST.

Shortly afterwards the then Lord came to his room, and Mr. Pringle with him, but not, said, Mr. Addison, at his request they met with the uninvited guest in the interest of men who were working the normal compulsory subscriptions for the National War.
