THE FIGHT FOR THE ENGLISHMAN'S HOME

Here is an Englishman's home, graced by happy wife and bonnie children, hitherto maintained in comfortable circumstances. It is typical of hundreds of thousands of homes on which the shadow of imminent poverty falls through the Government's bungling of the Derby scheme. Married men throughout the country look to 'Tommy' Bowles—seen in the top right-hand corner arriving at Leicester yesterday—to fight the Market Harborough by-election not merely for "Single Men First" or conscription for all, but for definite peace. Photographed in Worcester. Copyamat.
Mr. Gibson Bowles As Their Candidate.

WHIRLWIND BY-ELECTION.

Husbands' League Opposes The Coalition Nominee.

From Our Special Correspondent.

The attested married men of Market Harborough are delighted. They have a candidate of their own and a candidate of the right sort.

There were certainly thoughts at one time of putting up a local man, but as soon as it was known that Mr. Gibson Bowles was willing to be their champion all other thoughts were abandoned.

That this Government had put the men's faith to the test by its action was admitted by the members of the Rawtenstall tribunal Col. Douglas Haig, who had been a member of the War Office Committee, to the House of Commons.

Mr. J. F. Prichard, who supported the Rawtenstall tribunal Col. Douglas Haig,

"I am going to say at once that the Government has put the men's faith to the test by its action was admitted by the members of the Rawtenstall tribunal Col. Douglas Haig, who had been a member of the War Office Committee, to the House of Commons.

The Government's promise would be and was kept. It is a complete statement of the Government's intentions, and it is a clear statement of the facts."

Mr. Bowles's opponent, Mr. Percy Harris, of the C.C. party, asked the Government to show what it meant by the statement. His field was more practical than the theoretical, and he wanted to know what the Government was going to do in his constituency. The obvius reply for the House of Commons was a combination of the two men who were to take charge of the battle.

Furious German Attack To The West Of The Meuse.

FRENCH LINE FIRM.

Enemy Makes Heavy Sacrifices With Negligible Result.

FOOTHOLD AT TWO POINTS.

French Official News.

Panna, Tuesday, 11 p.m.

North of the Aisne the Germans tried to penetrate our trenches at the north-west fringe of the Loos Butte.

North of these attempts succeeded.

In the Argonne our artillery carried out an effective bombardment in the Four de Paris sector, with an objective to drive the Germans from their line, and also of the enemy railways, roads and organisations in the region of Montfaucon-Auvour.

West of the Meuse this morning, with heavy shells redoubled in violence, being directed against positions from Bethincourt to Cumieres.

In the afternoon the Germans launched a very strong attack on this sector. Altogether we took during the day 100 prisoners, including officers, and two machine-guns.-Reuter.

REPELLED ON WHOLE FRONT.

Repulsed on the whole of the front with heavy losses, only a few points. At two points of our trenches between Bethincourt and the Hurt Monte were attempted to penetrate our trenches at.

East of the Meuse and in the Waeeure the artillery was very active on both sides. In the course of the day there was no infantry action here.

Russian Official News.

Panna, Tuesday.

On the right front the enemy's line in the south of Lake Batik.

It was a typical case of a Russian detachment, having forced the enemy's artillery barrages, penetrated some of our trenches, shot and killed the occupants, and returned safe and sound. The action of Colonel Letts, commanding the 14th Battalion of Pontkaban, and in the Middle Syria region, our men served as a terror among the enemy's posts, and have taken many prisoners.

On the German front our troops continue to drive back the enemy.-Reuter.

HELP FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. Jowett drew the attention of the House of Commons last night to the hard case of a soldier who had contracted diseases while on active service at the front, and had been discharged from the Army as medically unfit and granted a very small pension or no pension at all. Several had gone into the view of the family of one of us, and had been told they were liable for the cost.

Mr. Forster, a small pension in our estimate, had decided to give four-thirds of the full pension to men who had been discharged from the Army by reason of their health, but not caused by military service. He did not think they had the right to make men, who had been under-updated knowing that they were unfit. A man wounded in action had the right of further appeal, but he could not make sure that any larger pension would be paid where appeals were allowed.

THE GOVERNMENT'S REPLY.

Mr. Tennant's speech on the Army Estimates was well received by the House, and in certain respects it was quite good. His defence of the Air Service, for example, was complete, and it is of interest that the Premier's pledge to married men would be kept in the spirit as well as the letter. The assurance was eminently satisfactory; provided always that the assurance is justified. It will be well to keep on assuring and reassuring. If the Government can be persuaded to believe that single men who have gone to war are to be nixed out, it must proceed to action.

In this connection I have to bring before the House a most public a scandal of which we have given no adequate action. It is, of course, anticipated that the Government is about to pass an Act which—either by means of a moratorium or otherwise—will lighten the responsibilities of married recruits. In anticipation of this, some landlords are trying to inform their tenant's landlord of the fact in order to get the breadwinner shortly be called up for service. This is an abominable state of things.

I am not going to blame anybody in particular at present. But I ask my reader to see how one of their influence to compel the Government at once to put the matter right.

With Mr. Tennant's statement in regard to pensions for men invalided out of the Army I was not content. It is a great improvement on the old basis, for the men who are suffering from diseases "aggravated though not caused" by service should receive four-fifths of the full pension for disablement. But everything depends on the doctor to decide whether the invalid was aggravated by service, caused by service, or neither caused nor aggravated by service.

It is not true (and there was no intention of my being so interpreted) that at the beginning of the war Mr. Balfour was prepared to have their allowances treated. It is true that men who were unfit asked the chances of rejection or a breakdown in order to have, God willing, a snack at the Germans. And Ihonour them. And they who have passed them too lightly into the service. It was not a case of concession on the part of the recruit; it was a case of gross carelessness on the part of the doctors—of those civilians, who, were, naturally enough, not only anxious, anxious to pass as many men as possible. Once these men were in the Army, however, the Government was morally bound to accept full responsibility for their physical health, and to prevent them from making for their future an evil commonplace.

Now we come to haggle over the question how far the disease has been "caused or merely aggravated." It is easy, fatally easy, to dilute the simple. The honest thing is to pay up and hock pleasant. It was in this spirit of Mr. Tennant to pledge himself to make the new regulation retrospective. If it is just to pay pensions in future to men who are invalided out of the conditions of war, surely never more just than in the case of men who enlisted in the early months of the war. We are spending millions a day over the war. Why are we to spend any extra penny we spend on the rank and file of the Army?

Teaching The Little Girl to Cook.

Two generations of girls have grown up in this country without being taught to cook, or, what is more important, to take an interest in cookery. All through her school days the average middle-class girl is allowed to believe that cooking is an unpleasant occupation which should be dodged when possible. When she is about to marry she perhaps rushes through a course of lessons at a cookery school, and on the strength of these wrestles with costly raw materials or tries to superintend incompetent servants. If her mother has only taken the trouble to instil into her childish mind the principles of cookery there would be less despair to-day when she tries to cook economically and get on without servants.

But the little girls of to-day will benefit by this particular lesson of war-time, and young mothers can begin to teach cookery even in the nursery. Before a child is old enough to work with proper materials or control heat she will be delighted to learn how to measure dry ingredients with sand. The movements of egg and batter beating may be learned with an empty bowl and fork. Miniature dishes should always be made at home. Doll-sized dishes should always be made at home.

A lawn collar and a chiffon blouse fit a sleeveless gown.

What It Said About A Woman Editor OfGerman Birth.

A letter written by the proprietor of one nursing journal against the proprietors of another resulted in the King's Bench Division yesterday in Mr. Justice Ridley awarding Messrs. MacMillan and Co., Ltd., proprietors of The Nursing Times, damages in the sum of £500 against the Nursing Press, proprietors of the British Journal of Nursing, one of the company, Mrs. Ethel Gordon, in her capacity as editor of the Press Printers, Ltd.

The defendants undertook to repeat further similar defamatory statements, and on this undertaking the other side did not press for any injunctive remedy.

The allegago libel, and which the order was, was made by Mr. H. F. Dickson, R.F.C., contained in the following passage published in the British Journal of Nursing, on May 5 last:

"FRAULEIN RULAN.

The Nursing Times is edited by Fraulein Rulan, the estranged lady of foreign origin who, under an assumed name, has been resident in England for some months, who was formerly naturalized as a British subject three months after the declaration of war, and has done as the Ministry of information has always asked, by making a contribution to the Home Front, in the shape of a gift subscription to the Nursing Times, for an adequate financial consideration.

The article went on to make insinuations against various people. The Secretary for War was asked—

"Is it true, Sir, that the Territorial Nursing Service still collaborated with Fraulein Rulan in the production of a Nursing Times, as hereinafter, is also attending at its office in a consultative position, and therefore under the control of its German editor?"

A Penny Pension Scheme.

Of the Queen's Nurses it was inquired—

"When you penny pension scheme was started for advertising purposes from the office of the Nursing Times did you know the half sister of the fund was Fraulein Rulan and not Miss Rulan? Now that you know, are you content to be patronised by her?"

To Miss MacMillan it was said—

"How long do you intend in order of patriotic feeling by employing foreign control? Not one penny of those British money should outside the unions, and for the defence it was said that what was complained of was the inference which must be drawn that MacMillan's ought not to employ an untrained body of German nurses at a time when we were at war with Germany?"

HELP FOR THE FREE BUFFETS.

Music And Shamrock Combine To Find Tommy "Refreshers."

Preparations for the grand concert at the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, in aid of the soldiers' free buffets on railways, in Ireland and elsewhere, are practically complete. It will be attended by Queen Alexandra.

An example of the novel appreciation of these buffet services, it may be mentioned that a man were served at London Bridge buffet last Sunday—hence the need for ample funds to keep it going. Lady Limerick, who with Lady Mandeville and Lady Rankin-Bellfield will attend the concert, told the Daily News yesterday how one man can help the buffets if unable to visit the concerts.

A great quantity of shamrock is being sent from London to Ireland, and even home in boxes which are to be sold at 1s. 6d., and 5s.

A P.O. sent to "Shamrock, London Bridge Buffet," will secure a box, and the receipts will be sent to the fund.

How do you, Miss Maynard?" he said. "And how's your father?"

She smiled slightly and said, "He's well."

As the man left, she thought that it was good to have someone to talk to about her father's illness. She had confided in the chemist about her problems, and he had offered to help her.

"I've told the chemist," she said, "that I need something to help with my dandruff." She looked up at him, and he could see the concern in her eyes.

"I've got just the thing," he said, handing her a small bottle of shampoo. "This will help to get rid of the dandruff and keep it away."

She thanked him and took the bottle, feeling a sense of relief. She had been struggling with dandruff for years and had tried many treatments, but none had worked.

As she left the store, she felt a sense of hope. Maybe this would help. She walked out into the day, feeling a little bit better.

danger Averted.

Sheila was a bit surprised when the chemist suggested that she try a new shampoo. She had been using the same one for years and had always been happy with it.

But as she tried the new shampoo, she noticed a difference. Her scalp felt less itchy, and her hair seemed to be less flaky. She was pleasantly surprised.

Sheila decided to try a few more of the chemist's suggestions, and she was even more impressed. The products were effective and made her feel better.

The chemist had suggested that she try using a mixture of molasses and vinegar to wash her hair. She had been hesitant at first, but she decided to give it a try.

The results were amazing. Her hair was shiny and clean, and her scalp felt almost completely free of dandruff.

Sheila was grateful to the chemist for his advice and recommendations. She felt better and more confident, and she was happy to have found a new solution to her dandruff problem.
