COULD Government and Civil Service Le run without any reference to business, then it would not matter to us whether these professions were filled by professors or ploughmen. But the most important duty of a Government is to advance the national welfare, and as the nation lives by its business it is essential that the State should be composed of practical men.

Arthur Russel Davies, managing clerk to Mr. W. P. Davies, the solicitor acting for Smith, was called, and spoke to Smith calling at his office on January 4 this year. He gave his name as John Lloyd, and said that his wife had recently died. He gave instructions for proving the will of his late wife, and produced the will of Margaret Eliza-beth Lloyd as well as the birth marriage and death beth Lloyd, as well as the birth, marriage and death certificates. He also produced a policy of insurance in the Yorkshire Insurance Company for, Davies believed, £700. The estate was sworn at £705 gross value and £698 10s. net.

Mr. Arthur F. Eaton, another Weymouth solicitor, spoke to Smith and a woman calling at his office in September 1910, and giving the name of Williams. Smith had some papers, including a copy of the will of Mr. George Bailey Mundy, and a list of securities. In the copy was the name of Bessie Constance Annie Mundy, as a beneficiary under the will. Smith said that his wife was the Bessie Annie Constance Mundy mentioned. He also said that his wife was the Bessie Annie Constance Mundy mentioned. He also said that his wife was entitled to about $123, which was not defined in the settlement, but that her people seemed to make some difficulty about paying over the money. THE WOMEN WHO WANT TO MAKE PEACE,

FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 1918.

The Firing Line?

A STRAIGHT QUESTION.

Of Names.

With shame of our past failure we women want now to shoulder the responsibility we never fully realised before. We want to face the future, to seek the truth, to think honestly and clearly, and to act according to the light we see.

Therefore we are going to meet women of other lands, our Allies, our "enemies," and those of neutral States, believing that only in mutual understanding can the truth be found, and the bitterness which, if fostered, will make a true and permanent peace impossible, be allayed.

This is the text of a leaflet which is being sent out broadcast by the British Committee of the International Women's Congress to be held at The Hague at the end of the month.

WELL-KNOWN ANTI-WAR PEOPLE. The British Committee consists of some 130 women, many of whom are well-known peace advocates. Mrs. George Cadbury, Mrs. Barrow Cadbury, Mrs. Brnce Glasier, Mrs. Outhwaite, Mrs. Arthur Ponsonby, Mrs. Charles Trevelyan, and Mrs. Zangwill are on the committee, which fur-ther contains women whose views are not so fami-liar such as liar, such as Miss Ethel Behrens. Mrs. Felix Moscheles, Miss Olive Schreiner, Mrs. A. Schuster, Mrs. Ticdeman.

No woman's organisation as a body is repre-sented, and the formation of provincial committees has yet to be completed, so that it may be quite true, as Mrs. Pankhurst told the Daily Sketch yes-terday, that these people represent nobody but themselves, in which case the movement need not be taken too seriously.

WHAT WILL OTHERS THINK?

At the same time, as pointed out by a correspon-dent of the Daily Sketch, people outside the British Isles may easily over estimate its significance.

"Can nothing he done," he asks, "to nip this can nothing be done, he have a start of the second studied movement in the bud? What will our Allies think? What must be the feelings of the mothers, wives and sisters of Belgium? Surely if Dr. Lyttelton was condemned these mis-guided women are even worse offenders?"

guided women are even worse offenders?" Another correspondent finds it impossible to believe that the members of the committee can have relatives and friends fighting in the war. This question was asked vesterday of the committee's officials by the Daily Sketch, and the answer was that the 'large majority'' of those concerned in the movement were directly connected with the war through their male relatives being in the Army or Navy. One lady's husband, it was stated, was a Navy. One lady's husband, it was stated, was a prisoner in Germany; another had several brothers

Dutch Refuse Consent To Violation Of Their Neutrality.

There is grave reason to believe, the Daily Sketch learns, that Holland is about to become involved in the European War.

Hitherto Holland has loyally observed the strictest neutrality towards all the belligerents.

This neutrality has been disagreeable in years of age. a high degree to Germany, which understands by neutrality special privileges for herself.

The main point at issue has been the use of the Scheldt waterway.

Dutch feeling had already been incensed by German submarine outrages on ships flying the Netherlands flag, and on March 26, as the Daily Sketch reported at the time, an important council of Ministers was held at The Hague to discuss the position.

Except for a few miles near Antwerp, the navigable Scheldt runs through Dutch territory.

Freedom of passage for commercial craft to Antwerp is allowed by treaty; but Holland could not permit the passage of warships without committing a breach of neutrality.

The result is that the capture of Antwerp has been of no use to the Germans for naval purposes. It could not be used as a naval base from which raids on the English coast could be made.

In the last few days it has become certain that Germany intended to disregard Dutch rights over the Scheldt and to send war craft in and out of Antwerp at her pleasure.

The German attitude was that if this could be done with Holland's consent so much the better. If not, she must take the consequences. " Necessity knows no law.'

The Daily Sketch understands that Holland is prepared to take the consequences, and will not in any circumstances consent to a flagrant violation

The Falaba was not armed. It is untrue that sufficient time was given for the passengers and crew to escape. The submarine closed the Falaba, ascertained her name, signalled her to stop, and gave them five minutes to take to their boats. It would have been nothing less than a miracle if all the passengers and crew of a good-sized liner had been able to take to the boats within the time allowed allowed.

While the boats were still on the davits the submarine firad a torpedo at the Falaba at short range. This action made it absolutely certain that there must be a great loss of life, and must have been committed knowingly with the intention to produce that accurate

Nurse 'Wincarnis' offers valuable advice to all who are Weak, Anæmic, 'Nervy,' 'Run-down'

Good health is our birth-right. But modern conditions of living rob us of that birth-right.

That birth-right. Overcrowding in great cities—adulterated food—impure air—overwork and anxiety—all these tend to undermine our health and make us Weak, Anæmic, "Nervy" and "Run-down." Our blood supply becomes im-poverished, thereby depriving us of the means of renewing our lost vitality. But what an impoverished blood supply is unable to do, 'Wincarnis' can do. 'Wincarnis' enriches and re-vitalises the blood supply and creates new blood which, circulating throughout the body, creates new vitality. and promotes a feeling of new life, and does more than create new blood. It tones up every organ of the body-it restores the lost strength—and it creates new nerve force. Because 'Wincarnis' is a Tonic, a Restorative, a Blood-maker and a Nerve food—all in one. That is why over to,ooo Doctors recommend 'Wincarnis.' If you are Weak, Anæmic, 'Nervy,' Run-down '—or a martyr to Indigestion— or vainly trying to regain strength after an exhausting illness—or enfeebled by old age—or suffering from that terrible weakness following Influenza—'Wincarnis' will renew your strength, restore your vitality, enrich your blood and strengthen your nerves. # These Four Children's Ringworms Completely Banished.

"Four years ago," said Mrs. Holden, 15, Washington-street, Chichester, to a "Portsmouth Times" reporter, "I noticed large, grey, dry patches on my daughter Margaret's head. These patches caused great irritation, and spread till the whole of her scalp was covered with angry rings. Margaret was off school 15 weeks.

"For some months Margaret was treated at the Infirmary, but without success. To make matters worse, my other children, Ellen (8), Albert (6), and Evelyn (5), all caught the disease and so added to my worry.

"Happening to read about Zam-Buk in the paper I tried the balm. Almost immediately I noticed that the irritation grew less and the children were not so fretful. To my delight, further dressings with Zam-Buk, besides soothing the irritation, cleansed and healed my little ones' scalps. All four children now have fine heads of hair.

" I must add that Albert went to the Infirmary when using "The doctor, after examining the boy's head, said that he was getting on splendidly, and advised me to continue with Zam-Buk. "It is four years since my children were cured by Zam-Buk, and there has not been the slightest sign of a return of the ringworm."

MISERY AFTER INFLUENZA.

The debility and depression following an attack of Influenza mean more than a fancied disorder. This condition is a form of neurasthenia or nervous exhaustion that develops after Influenza and its seriousness is very frankly recognised by all medical writers.

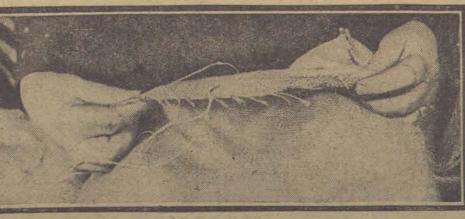

One authority states: "Broadly speaking, every victim of Influenza will suffer from neurasthenia

One authority states: "Broadly speaking, every victim of Influenza will suffer from neurasthenia afterwards. Lowering of nervous tone, with increased irritability, is the most striking effect of the disease, with languor of mind and body, disturbed sleep and pains in the head and elsewhere." Every sufferer will at once recognise the symptoms. What is the remedy?
After the fever has passed and the Influenza has subsided the dist should be liberal, but limited to articles easily digested. Rest and sufficient sleep are essential, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the only medicine required in most cases. # THE GREENHAM STAKES,

The first Newbury meeting since the war started will be held to-day and to-morrow. The course was taken by the Government for the internment of Germans, but these left for other quarters some time ago.

Those left in the Greenham Stakes include some classic contenders of high standing. But unfortunately Friar Marcus will not run, while Sunfire may also be an absentee.

with Costello, in that the latter has had an outing in public.
Costello did not do all that was required of him at Liverpool, but that race has brought him on, and he is certain to want a lot of beating.
Robinson may also start Tulliemet, but the latter can have no chance, and I much prefer Cattistock, who was quite a useful sort last year and is reported to have improved.
If Plucky Ligge put in an appearance she would make the race more interesting, but choosing between Volta and Costello I have a slight preference for the latter.
In the Berkshire Three Year-Old Handicap there is a chance for Lux to make amends for his defeat in the Lincolnshire Handicap. He has done well since that race, and the weight to-day would permit of the strong hendling he requires.
Others who are fancied are Rushford, Wormfeighton, Sir Thomas, and Eastington, but Lux may beat the lot.

ROSELAND A: O THE "CUINEAS." Persse has scratched Mr. Basset's colt out of the Two Thousand Guineas. It would, therefore, appear that Roseland is just as much wrong as was expected and that the Stockbridge trainer is likely to have the same extent of trouble with him as he had with The Tetrarch last year. Runners were again scarce at Warwick yesterday, and there was nothing of any consequence in the racing.

and there was around or all racing. Romaldo was expected to follow up the success of Sudden Squall by taking the Town Handicap, but he failed to stay, and in an exciting finish Llangenor beat the penalized Erl King by a short head, being a triffe lucky to do so. After once being shouted at longer odds than 2 to 1 Windlesham eventually settled down favourite at that price for the Spring Three-Year-Old Handi-cap. As at Lingfield and Lincoln, however, he had to be content with one of the minor positions, failing to catch Dacato by three-quarters of a length. There was a fine finish in the Grove Park Plate, and the favourite, Principal Girl, stayed on to beat Hellene colt by three-quarters of a length. GIMCRACK.

Suffocated By A Gag Made Out Of Her Handkerchief,

MOTHER'S TEARS.

Who Gave The Child A Meal An Hour Before Death?

No clues that would lead to the arrest of the murderer of little Maggie Nally were disclosed at the inquest opened at the City Coroner's Court vesterday.

Maggie Nally, who was 7 last Saturday, was found murdered in the ladies' cloak-room ar-Aldersgate-street Station at midnight on Sunday. She was suffocated by a gag formed of a piece of pique, which her mother had given her to use as a handkerchief.

John Henry Nally, the father of the murdered girl, identified the body. He last saw Maggie alive at 4.30 on Sunday afternoon at the corner of Carlistestreet. He got home at 8 o'clock and Maggie had not arrived. He thought she might be at her aunu's or her grandmother's.

When he last saw Maggie she was wearing a hat

WOMEN SOB IN COURT.

The coroner asked for the child's clothes to be produced, and the father identified them as having been worn by his daughter on Sunday. As the father examined the clothes the child's

As the father examined the clothes the child's mother sobbed and rocked to and fro in her gries. Other women in Court were also affected. In reply to Superintendent Ottaway, the father said Maggie occasionally visited her relatives in Carlisle-street, but she was usually accompanied by her two brothers. She never complained of being accosted by anyone in the street. Mrs. Christine Nally, dressed in deep black, with her face sorrowful and tear-stained, gave evidence that Maggie went to visit her relatives in Carlisle-street on Sunday. The mother almost broke down at this stage and sobbed for several minutes. A glass of water was handed to her, and she was able to proceed with her evidence after having sipped a little of the water. She last saw her daughter, she added, in the street proceeding towards Carlisle-street.

THE CHILD'S HANDKERCHIEF.

The piece of material which was found in the child's mouth was next produced. Mrs. Nally said that she gave it to Maggie on Sunday to use as a that she gave it to Maggie on Sunday to use as a handkerchief. Mrs. Betsy Scott, a relative of the mirdered child, said Maggie visited her in Carlisle street, on Sunday afternoon at 4.20. Maggie and Mrs. Scott's little daughter Alice went to Maggie's grandfather's and returned about 7.30. Then the two children went to a neighbour's and afterwards to fetch some matches. They came back to play the piano, but as Mrs. Scott was feeling unwell she gave them a penny to buy sweets. This was about eight o'clock, and it was the last she saw of Maggie Alice told her when she re-turned that Maggie-had gone home. Little Alice at the coroner's suggestion, was questioned by her mother. A pretty, little, fair-haired child of four, she hid her face shyly azanat her mother, and all attempts to get her to speak were fruitless. Inspector Richard Charles Groves, of the Metro her mother, and all attempts to get her to speak were fruitless.

Inspector Richard Charles Groves, of the Metropolitan Railway station at Aldersgate, said the woman attendant at the ladies' cloakroom left about 7 p.m.
"After the last train had gone I put out the lights on the platform," he went on, "and I took a handlight and went upstairs.
"I unlocked the ladies' room door, and I had difficulty in opening it. As soon as I got inside I saw the little girl's hand.
"The child was lying on its back with its feet towards the door and its little arms outstretched, the back of the hands being on the floor. The right cheek was towards the floor. The mouth was open, and here was something discoloured in it. I formed the opinion at once that the child had been murdered—suffocated."
He did not notice any person accompanied by a child during the time he was in the station. nor did he see any person carrying a large parcel, nor any person acting in a suspicious way.

Will The Shadow Skirt Succeed?

" drop-skirt THE transparent or petticeat hanging below the hem of the skirt proper, has been offered in many tempting forms, but most well-dressed women have been shy of it.

Here and there one sees an example which is fairly successful—a young girl has a "drop" of chiffon on her evening frock, or an older woman shows an edging of black lace under a black silk or taffeta gown-but as a general rule the fashion is a dowdy one. It looks untidy, and the note of the smart clothes of 1915 is an extreme neatness. It is this neatness which gives the military effect better than miles of braid or imitations of the cut of various uniforms.

Now that the dropskirt is more or less a failure, the "shadow' skirt is to be offered in turn. It is a sort of reversal of the dropskirt, for the transparent material is worn over the real businesslike skirt and hangs below it, so that the beholder sees an exagger-ated version of the sights of recent summers, when the sun showed up short petticoats under thin frecks.

The handsome example of the shadow skirt in the sketch was designed in one of the most dignified houses of Paris, and is certainly less objectionable than one might imagine it to be from its description. The skirt is of black chiffon over black satin, and black satin also forms the close-fitting sleeves. Note the fob which slips through the queer little white cloth bodice and the bell cuffs of clear lawn, for these are to appear on many new gowns.

A way out of the dis-comforts of the high collar is here shown, for the collar is high only at the back of the neck The wide opening at the front is a medizeval re-vival, which is only becoming to young and pretty women. High boots must be worn with these trans-parent frocks. If stocking instead of boot gleams through the chiffon the effect is deplor-skirt will survive through the summer. S. H.

NEW SERIAL.

BEGIN THIS SERIAL NOW. RICHARD CHARD, the young inventor of a feed-for a submarine engine, is married in his native, village of Naxby to his boyhood's sweetheart, EVELINE, an orphan girl of 18. Their honey-moon at Sheringham is disturbed by Richard being called to London for an interview with the directors of a shipbuilding firm. He accepts an offer of $40,000 for his invention, and walks out into the London streets with the cheque in his pocket.

into the London streets with the cheque in his pocket. The pays a visit to a West End clairvoyante, who tells him there is waiting for him a woman with deep amber eyes and swathes of night-black hair. Richard, clated by the sale of his invention, postpones his return to Steringham until next day. While dining in a West End hotel he finds at the next table Lord Rendlesham and his sister, LADY PATRICIA FANE, a beautiful woman with through a Society divorce suit. A carelessly-thrown match sets light to Lady Pat's dress and Richard puts out the flames with his naked hands. Lady Patricia invites Richard to spend the vening with her. He leaves her boudor at mid-night, and on arriving at his hotel finds the cheque for £40,000 is missing. After a restless night and an early call at the determines to ask the help of Lady Patricia. Lady Pat sends him his cheque, Richard determines to ask the help of Lady Patricia. Found on her boudoir carpet, and invites him to come to tea with her that atternoon.

A Trip To Paris.

Everyone in Lady Patricia Fane's set gambled, so Lady Pat gambled, too. She was always in debt, in spite of her large allowance from Lord Rendlesham. Richard as a young man who gave pleasure was one being; Richard with a cheque for forty thousand pounds loose in his pocket another. She considered the problem while her maid dressed her very beautifully for the tea to which Richard was to come. Richard came, buoyant and upright, a man at ease. The cheque had been safely paid in, and he was eager to be grateful. Lady Pat made the way easy for him; then she made him talk about himself. "Actually married," she said in a queer voice. She had known it before, but at that moment she made it seem almost a sin to Richard. "Married, and—well, just that!" she said, with a faint laugh. "Rather An As you?" It was an impertinent question, and stung Richard for an instant. He seemed to see Evie's face and hear her voice; and he was man enough to say, "The only reason-love." "I wonder what you know about love?" said Lady Pat. Richard stared at her, his face flushing. She waited a little, then roused herself. "I wish you were free, after all, for such a selfish reason," she said with a smile. "What reason?' he said, leaning forward. "Do tell me." you? It

"We're getting up a party, some friends and I, and we're just a man short, and I—it would have been jolly if you could have come. That was all."

The Chance Of A Lifetime.

A hurried vision of the wonders the clairvoyante had promised him came to Richard. He saw the land of splendour, the days of rare achievement, the nights of mysterious adventure. This was a chance that might never come his way again. "Where are you going?" he asked a little hoarsely.

"Oh, Paris, Egypt, you know. Just a little month of holiday, that's all. Perhaps Monte Carlo, just for fun."

Richard knew his lips were very dry. "Is that invitation still open?" he asked as steadily as he could. Lady Patricia gave a little cry of happy amaze-ment. "Ah, you will come then?"

It was the one chance of his lifetime, and he had earned it. He would make it all as right as possible for Evie. Half of his money was hers. He would write to her and explain. She would understand.

FRIDAY, APRIL . 1918.

BEGIN TO-DAY

Dick's Letter To Evic.

In his bedroom at the hotel he sat down to write to Evie. It was not an easy letter to write. His face was burning and his hair was ruffled by his restless hand before it was finished. It began began :-Darling Evie.-I've sold the oil-feed for forty thousand pounds. Enclosed you'll find a cheque for £10,000. Later on I shall, of course, halve it equally with you. Now I want to explain something. It's this! I have the chance of going a trip abroad, just for a month. I know how keen you are for me always to have a chance to get on, how unselfash you are, so I'm sure you'll want me to accept. As a matter of fact, I have already done so. We start to-morrow, I and a crowd of people (all rather important people. I believe-influential to know, I mean), and; of course, I'll write when. ever I can. I know you'll understand, darling. You'd know, I mean), and, of course, I'll write when, ever I can. I know you'll understand, darling. You'l better go home, I think, and get old Trenley in do all the legal part of the money for you. Get whatever you like. Write to me at —, Richard stopped. He had no idea where Lady Patricia's party was going to stay first. After a little hesitation he rang up Lord Rendlesham. A man's voice answered, and he asked for Lady Patricia. In another moment her soft, drawling voice said: "Hello." "It's Richard Chard," said Richard shyly. "I say, Lady Patricia, where do we stop first—at what address, I mean?" "At Paris, of course," the soft voice answered. "Hotel Meurice, I suppose, all the lot of us. We leave Victoria to-morrow at eleven, you know, and we're to be in Marseilles by the twelfth to catch the yacht. What are you doing' Where are you?" "At my hotel, such a humble one I daren't name it," Richard said gaily. "Well, don't be late to-morrow. Good night." "Good night," said Richard. Then, with a sigh, he sat down to finish his letter to his wife. "He signed it "Your loving husband, Dickie," and went out to register it. Then he spent a con-siderable sum of money on clothes, to be ready or his departure next morning.

Marnied, and-well, just that!" she said, with a faint laugh. "Just that! What does that mean?" Richard asked. "Well, you belong altogether-you aren't free, I mean. I thought, with all you told me yesterday about the crystal vision, that you were an adven turer setting off to find your destiny." "A thought came to Richard which made nim grow hot-the thought "I wish I were." "But marriage needn't tie up all the rest of life," he protested. "Needn't it?" said Lady Pat, her eyes suddenly wide open. "You wait! Whatever made you marry so early, when you had everything before you?" I was an impertiment, another was determined and a state of the whole thing. "I don't know. You'l have to wait," Richard said irritably, staring about him for some sign of Lady Pat. Time was getting on, and he was becom-ing angry, when, strolling languidy through the crowd, he saw Lord Rendlesham. "Hullo," said Rendlesham. "I haven't even got a ticket vet." Richard said.

late, what? We've been waiting an age. Inset your traps? Tell the man to take 'em to the Pullman, boat train, y'know."
"I haven't even got a ticket yet," Richard said.
"Let the feller get it then," Rendlesham 'said, shouting after the porter, who came back at a run." Get this gentleman a first single Paris," he said, "and look fively."
Richard gave the man a banknote, and followed his big host along the platform.
"What on earth've you been up to?" Rendlesham asked over his shoulder. He had no real idea who Richard was, save that his sister liked him. He seemed rather an ass, but he supposed Richard was all right. Pat said he was pretty well off, and they needed a man to make up the rubber anyway. He surveyed Richard as they walked along. Good-looking in a clean sort of way, he decided, but perhaps a bit weak about the chin.
"There we are," he said, stopping at the Pullman car. "That's our little lot in the private part. Come on."

As Richard followed him a babel of cries reached

As Richard followed him a babel of cries reached him. There were four women and two men seated at the little tables. Lady Pat came forward. "At last," she said with a laugh of reproof. "Come along and be in-troduced." She turned to the women. "Maude, Charlotte, Phyl, let me present Mr. Richard Chard." She turned to Richard. "Sir, I make known to you Lady Dacre, Miss Charlotte Brent, my cousin, and Miss Phylis Waine. Now, Tip and Randal, stand up and behave prettily." stand up and behave prettily.

Richard faced the problem on his way back to the hotel. Of course, he did love Evie. Hadn't he married her to prove it? But a man who had done what he had done at his age descred a little more from life than a village existence. This visit to Egypt was the chance of a literime. He per suaded himself that he wished Evie could come too. Of course he'd send her money. Should he go back to Sheringham? The party left town in a couple of days. Better not go back. "I'll hink it over," he decided. On his way up Regent street he went past the fortune-teller's, and the old fascination gripped him again. He was near a telegraph office. He tore off a telegraph form hurriedly, and wrote on it hastily: "Not coming yet Writing.—Richard " In a flash of memory his talk with Evie on the cliffs at Sheringham came back to him. He had said then that marriage was a sort of end of things: you had got what you wanted and your love belonged to you for evermore. He did love Evie: of course he did. All he wanted was a little freedom. After that he would settle down.

Maggie Nally, a fiend's victim.

The 'bus conductor who says he saw Maggie Nally with a man.

Not since the Houndsditch murders had such a crowd gathered outside the City Coroner's Court, where the inquest on Maggie Nally was held.

Truth is ever stranger than fiction. The amazing story unfolded in the "Brides in the Bath" case surpasses the most daring conceptions of fertile inventors of shilling shockers. Nor is the mystery that surrounds the fate of little Maggie Nally less absorbing in its tragedy. It is not a morbid appetite for the gruesome details of crime that attracted such crowds as flocked to Bow-street and to the Nally inquest yesterday, but an instinctive interest in the moving melodrama of human life.—(Daily Sketch Photos.)
